FOSS, AT MILL GATES, SPEAKS TO THOUSANDS

LAWRENCE, Oct. 31.—Governor Foss in noon rallies at mill gates to-day not only established the precedent of the Governor of the Commonwealth talking to thousands of toilers, but in the heart of the woolen industry of the world told operatives that their wages would neither be reduced nor the mills closed in the event of his re-election.

"There is no connection whatever," said the Governor, "between the profits of the manufacturer and the wages of the employe. If you think there is, how do you explain that here in Lawrence, while your wages have been only slightly increased, the cost of living has gone up in greater ratio.

HELPED TO EMPTY DINNER PAILS.

"The industries you toil in here are the ones that helped to empty the dinner pails. The industries are just as busy as they were a year ago, and the mines free as you did a year ago, and Massachusetts will have sent its message to Washington for relief from tariff extortions and we'll have an end to the burden of Lodge and all his kind in this good old Commonwealth."

Briefly addressing a crowd of 1,000 outside the postoffice in Lawrence, just as he arrived from Andover, the Governor started on his speaking tour of the mill gates.

Governor Foss said:

The Same Old Howl.

"In the present campaign you have been repeatedly told by my opponents that if I am elected the mills will close, soup houses will be open and ruin will follow. It is the same old calamity howl that has always been raised when any attempt has been made to reduce the cost of living by taking the graft out of the tariff.

"It is so absolutely false that I wonder any one has the hardihood to stand before an intelligent audience and proclaim it.

"Why should I endeavor to destroy the business industries of Massachusetts when I have spent my whole business life in building them up, and in trying to bring about conditions that would keep our industries here instead of driving them to other parts of the country?

"No man in Massachusetts has more at stake in her business success than I have. I have built mills and factories employing thousands of people, and have shown my love for Massachusetts by refusing to do as so many others have done—remove nearer the source of my raw material.

Save Industries in State.

"I made up my mind to keep the industry here in Massachusetts and fight for better tariff conditions.

"Does that look as though I would endeavor to bring about conditions that would result in ruin and disaster?

"I have sought to so modify conditions that our few remaining industries would not be driven from the State by adverse tariff laws. Where is the big textile industry that employed thousands in Cambridge and Charlestown and Boston a little over a score of years ago? Driven from Massachusetts by a tariff policy that refused to let us get our raw material from a source only 150 miles away, driven to Michigan, and to-day every Massachusetts furniture dealer has to make his pilgrimage half across the continent when he desires to stock up.

"Where are the big iron foundries and the heavier iron industries that flourished here and employed thousands? Gone to Pennsylvania and the South.

"And I might go on and point out that the shoe industry which Massachusetts dominated for so many years is being driven to the West because of this same famous tariff policy.

Defeat for Republicans.

"As a Massachusetts manufacturer I protested against a continuation of this policy and against the high cost of living in order that a few protected interests might extort an unnecessary tribute from

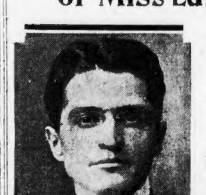
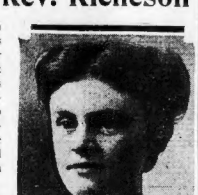
This Was to Have Been the Wedding Day of Miss Edmands and Rev. Richeson



REV. CLARENCE RICHESON



MISS VIOLET EDMANDS

Richeson was to have been married this evening to Miss Violet Edmands, the daughter of one of the most prominent residents of Brookline. Miss Edmands is a college graduate and eminently fitted to become the wife of any clergyman. She and her family were happy in the event that had been prepared for with such loving solicitude.

More than 700 invitations had been sent out for this wedding. The bride-to-be had spent much thought on her wedding gown. It had been ordered, fitted, refitted and finished. And then came the heart-breaking, soul-crushing shock.

The wedding dress hangs like a white badge of grief in one of the rooms of a Back Bay modiste. Miss Edmands has not seen it since her great trouble came—she will never look upon it again, in all probability.

And there is another wedding dress. It was not made by the expert fingers of skilled needlewomen. It was made by Avis Linnell, almost all herself, for she, too, was to have been the bride of the clergyman. Into the white gown Avis Linnell sewed her heart. Her girl friends in Hyannis watched her and gazed with limpid eyes at the finery—simple, but endowed with the richness that transcendent love gives to most commonplace things on earth.

And where is that wedding dress? It is wrapped about the chilled form of the little girl asleep in the quiet churchyard of Hyannis. It is a shroud, crumbling away in a casket!

TURKS CAPTURE ITALIAN FORTS

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 31.—Dispatches from Tripoli, published in the Turkish newspaper Tanin to-day, stating that the Italians were driven from two of their outposts outside of the city of Tripoli but still hold the city, are believed to reveal the actual situation there.

These dispatches say that the Turks and Arabs, in a fierce sortie from the interior, captured two forts, driving off the Italian soldiers, who abandoned great quantities of arms and ammunition.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Although reports from Constantinople via Berlin that the Turks have recaptured Tripoli from the Italians with enormous losses to the latter remain unconfirmed, advices from the Turkish capital say that the Italians lost 5,000 men and 7,000 others were taken captive by the Turks.

They say that the Italians fought bravely to save the city, but were compelled to hoist the white flag.

According to Italian reports the army of occupation in Tripoli was composed of 15,000 men, but the Constantinople dispatches account for only 12,000.

ROME, Oct. 31.—Serious fighting between Italian soldiers and the Turkish and Arab armies is going on outside the city of Tripoli, according to dispatches to-day from Signor de Felice, the Italian deputy, who is in Tripoli as a war correspondent. He reports that the Italians are gaining. One thousand Arabs were killed in an engagement at Homs on Saturday, he states. Italian warships shell the desert to the east and west of the city when heavy forces of the enemy attack from those quarters.

SECOND GLOVER WILL FIGHT IS ON

The second contest over the will of Clarence E. Glover, the Waltham laundryman who was shot and killed in his laundry a year ago last November, was opened to-day after much delay in the Supreme Court house in Cambridge. The case will probably run two days, and it is expected that several sensations in connection with the murder, which still remains a mystery, will be forthcoming.

Under the will of Glover the estate was to be divided between Lillian M. Glover, his widow, and Professor Gilman Frost. It is being contested by the four other brothers of Glover. The will was allowed in the Probate Court by Judge McIntire.

EVERYONE READY FOR HALLOWE'EN

If you meet a couple of Jack-o'-lanterns or three or four ghosts slipping around the corner this evening, don't get nervous. It's only a Hallowe'en celebrant on the way to a party.

To-night is Hallowe'en, or All Hallows Eve. To-night old and young, especially the young, invoke the fairies, hobgoblins, spooks and such folk to come out and tell the truth about matters of the heart.

According to the legend, these fairies and so forth, invoked by to-night's rites, will tell just what's what. But to-morrow they will be just the other. So to-morrow don't believe anything you hear. It may be a fairy story.

Every girl in Greater Boston will be at a Hallowe'en party to-night if she can, either by attending some other girl's party or by holding one in her own home.

The boys and girls will bob for apples, roast chestnuts, devour "punkin" pies, tell their fortunes by apple parings. Above all, the girls will walk down the cellar stairs backward, with a mirror and a lighted candle, trying to see in the mirror the face of the future husband. It's creepy job, going down the cellar stairs at night, watching for a face in a mirror. Some girls have become so frightened that when they got back upstairs they had to have their hands held for five minutes by some "next" friend.

To-morrow there will be a lot of weary clerks, stenographers and so forth. They will be sleepy because they stayed up late on Hallowe'en.

SENDS GREETINGS TO BOSTON NEWSBOYS

The Rev. E. A. Horton, chaplain of the Massachusetts Senate, who is now on a tour of Europe, has sent his hearty greetings to the Boston newsboys, of whom he is very fond.

His best remembrances he sends to "Waldman, the Park street subway newsboy." To this he adds thanks for the flowers that were sent by the newsboys to the ship when he sailed from Boston. He said that the floral token lasted for a long time. His hearty greetings were extended to the Newsboys' Union.

A clipping from an English newspaper regarding the advancement of the English newsboy, which he received to-day, quotes Dr. Horton as saying that the newsboys in Boston is better than any boy of the same business in this form in country.

LOSES A DOG; KILLS HIMSELF

Rather than live without his pet fox terrier, Alfred Lindstrom, a marine fireman, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head in Merchants Alley, off North street, North End. His body was found in the alley early to-day.

Lindstrom hailed from England but has been working around various ports, always accompanied by the little fox terrier, of which he was very fond.

He came to Boston three days ago from Newport, R. I. During his travels around town he lost the dog.

Last night, when he returned to his boarding house at No. 46 Fleet street, he was discouraged over not finding his pet. He told the other boarders about it and ended his tale by saying:

"I can't find the dog anywhere, and I might as well die. I don't want to live if I can't have my dog."

His words were not taken very seriously at the boarding house, though all perceived that Lindstrom was very depressed.

To-day Lindstrom's body was found in Merchants alley by John Murphy of No. 132 Medford street, Somerville. Murphy made just enough of an examination to see that the man was dead. Then he hurried to the Hanover street police station and reported the case.

Beside Lindstrom was a thirty-two caliber revolver with one shell discharged. He had needed but a single shot to end his life. The body was viewed by Assistant Medical Examiner Watters, who pronounced the case one of suicide, and then ordered the body to the North Grove street morgue.

In Lindstrom's pocket was found a card of the Newport Marine Firemen's Union. This organization was mulcted. At the boarding house it was learned that Lindstrom was forty years old and a family in England.

ROXBURY MAN CUTS HIS THROAT

Anthony Pendergast, thirty-six years old, a lodger in the house at No. 1,026 Tremont street, Roxbury, committed suicide early to-day, by cutting his throat. He was found lying on the floor of his room by Mrs. Anna Shuler, the landlady. A razor was clenched in his right hand and there was a great gash in his throat.

Pendergast was taken to the City Hospital, where he died shortly after. No reason can be assigned for the suicide.

PRISONER PALE BUT CALM IN FIRST ORDEAL

The Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, accused of the murder of Avis Linnell, was taken from the Charles street jail to the Municipal Court in a covered van to-day and arraigned before Judge Murray. His case was continued until next Tuesday. The clergyman was then taken back to the jail.

It is expected that before evening the Grand Jury that has had the murder under consideration for four days will report. The secret body reassembles at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

RIDES IN VAN WITH OTHER PRISONERS.

Richeson left the jail about 8:30. He rode in one of three vanloads of prisoners. There were all sorts and conditions of men and women. When the van got to the Court House Richeson was taken through corridors and up a flight of stairs and seated in the general detention room with the other prisoners.

Judge Murray appeared on the bench at 9:30 o'clock. Just before this Assistant District Attorney Lavelle and Lawyer Philip B. Dunbar conferred. Dunbar represents Richeson, Clerk Ingalls taking a paper from his desk, said to Court Officer John Mitchell:

"Bring up Clarence Richeson."

The court officer disappeared. The courtroom was jammed. There was a buzz of excitement. All eyes were turned in the direction of the door through which Mitchell disappeared. It was very quiet. In a minute the door opened.

Gazes at the Crowd.

"There he is!" It came in dozens of simultaneous whispers. Richeson walked in. He was conducted to the railing at the side of the judge's bench. The clergyman grasped the railing. He steadied himself. His lips were close together.

Then he swept the audience with his black eyes. If he were looking for anyone, he apparently did not find him. A sort of bewildered look came over his face. His eyes wandered around and finally fixed themselves on the face of Clerk Ingalls.

There was not a whisper in the room. Heads were poked forward to get a glance of the remarkable prisoner. A tall, well-built man was seen. He was dressed in black. He wore a white tie. His black hair was parted in the middle. His face was very pale.

Nerve is Unshaken.

But it was apparent that he is a man of wonderful nerve. He did not tremble. He did not appear ashamed. There was no cringing in his attitude. He looked like a man who would fight until the last—die fighting, if necessary.

Ingalls held out the warrant and spoke to the preacher. He said in a low voice:

"Your case is continued until November ——. You are held without bail."

The clergyman said nothing. Dunbar, standing near, said nothing. Judge Murray, quietly observing the proceedings, said nothing.

Court Officer Mitchell touched Richeson on the arm and the clergyman followed him out of the room. He was taken into the detention room. Then the regular proceedings of the court—the long stream of prisoners—faced the judge.

Lawyer Dunbar joined Richeson in the detention room. They had a long talk. Then the prisoner, charged with a crime the punishment of which is death in the electric chair, was taken back to his prison cell.

Richeson reached the Charles street jail on his return from court at 10:20. Every precaution was taken to circumvent photographers. The van was backed in the mouth of a tunnel at the jail and Richeson got out and was conducted to his cell unseen from the street.

The prosecution has in its possession additional information secured a Hyannis by Assistant District-Attorney Lavelle and Captain Armstrong, who went there from Boston in an automobile, accompanied by a stenographer. They made three calls, the longest being at the Linnell home. There they devoted most of their time to Edgar Linnell, father of the murdered girl.

Mr. Linnell is afflicted with an impediment in his speech, which is all the more pronounced when he is agitated. It is believed that the prosecution sought to spare the father going before the Grand Jury on account of this vocal trouble.

Visit to Hyannis.

The Assistant District-Attorney, Captain Armstrong and the stenographer arrived at 6:30 p. m. last evening and were in town till 9:30. They were met by State Officer Ernest C. Bradford, who has been working on the local end of the case.

First they drove the car to the home of Edward L. Chase on Main street. Mr. Lavelle and Captain Armstrong went into the house. The State officer and the stenographer stayed in the car. Mr. Lavelle and Captain Armstrong were talking with Mr. Chase ten minutes.

Mr. Chase's house is the second one from the Baptist Church, where Avis Linnell sang in the choir and Pastor Richeson preached. Mr. Chase attended services at that church and was acquainted with Avis and the pastor. But there is a closer relation than that of church between the Chase and Linnell families. Milton Chase, son of Edward L. Chase, married Avis's elder sister, Edith Linnell. It is presumed that the Assistant District Attorney and the Boston Inspector questioned Mr. Chase about Pastor Richeson's habits so far as he had observed them, also about the pastor's relations with Avis.

From Chase's house the party drove rapidly to Aurin Crocker's on Sea Street, South Hyannis. They stayed there a few minutes. The stenographer accompanied Mr. Lavelle and Captain Armstrong into the house. State Officer Bradford stayed in the car.

Tells of Pastor's Illness.

Mr. Crocker is a deacon in the Baptist church and the only deacon so far as known, who has come out with statement of Pastor Richeson's peculiar actions at times during the pastor owned to be mentally ill. Deacon Crocker, in a previous statement, has said:

"Once I was called into the house of Mrs. Charles Wyman when Pastor Richeson was boarding there. Richeson was on the couch in a sort of stupor. I called in Dr. C. A. Binford, who gave Richeson a couple of pills and said: 'Oh, he'll be all right in an hour or two.' Then the doctor left. I returned to the house later in the evening. This was a Saturday night, and found the pastor still in a sort of stupor. I said: 'Well have to get someone else to fill your pulpit to-morrow.' At that Richeson jumped up and said: 'Oh, I'm all right now. I'll preach to-morrow.' And he did seem all right."

From Deacon Crocker's the party drove down to the Edgar Linnell home at Hyannisport. The Linnells knew nothing of their coming, for a little earlier in the

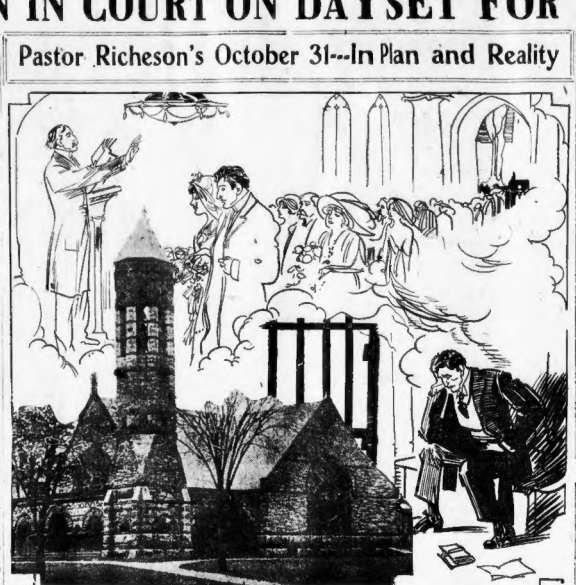
RICHESON IN COURT ON DAY SET FOR WEDDING

Pastor Richeson's October 31---In Plan and Reality



Today was the day set for Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson's marriage to Violet Edmands. Newton Center Baptist Church, where ceremony was to have been performed, is a frown. Wedding is cancelled and pastor in jail.

Case of Man Accused of Linnell Murder Is Continued for One Week.

evening, Mrs. Linnell had said she was expecting no one from Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Linnell and Helen, the fourteen-year-old daughter, were home.

Mr. Lavelle, Captain Armstrong and the stenographer were in the Linnell house three-quarters of an hour. A half-hour of that time was devoted to Mr. Linnell. Mrs. Linnell, who had already appeared before the Grand Jury, was asked a few questions. Edith Linnell was also questioned. She gave to Mr. Lavelle a letter which Avis had written her the afternoon of the Saturday she was poisoned. This is probably the last letter Avis Linnell ever wrote.

The party left the Linnell home at 8.50 o'clock and drove to the telephone exchange where Mr. Lavelle talked over the wire a few minutes. Then he hurried back to the auto and, with Captain Armstrong and the stenographer, returned over the road to Boston. State Officer Bradford remained here.

Jury's Report Awaited.

It was believed that the grand jury would report at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Judge Sanderson, before whom the jury would appear with a report, got through with his cases at 10 o'clock. There was nothing for him to do further, apparently, to-day, yet he adjourned until 2 o'clock. This caused the reporters at the court house to believe that the Grand Jury would appear before him with the result of the long inquiry.

Congressman Robert O. Harris had a talk with District Attorney Pelletier at 9:30 to-day. Harris is associate counsel for Richeson. It was presumed that he obtained from the District Attorney the program to be carried out with relation to Richeson's case to-day.

Should the Grand Jury find an indictment against Richeson for murder it is believed he would be arraigned within twenty-four hours to plead to the indictment.

Fate, writing with tragic finger, placed a ring around October 31 in the life of the Rev. Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson.

It is All Halloween, the day of youthful pranks, of laughter and love. Yet how the wraiths of midnight are the memories that throng the mind of the accused clergyman of the past anniversaries!

Richeson was arraigned in the Municipal Court to-day as one of the possible steps that the law takes toward bringing him to the bar of justice.

Grand Jury Report To-day.

The Grand Jury, that has had his case in hand four days, to-day reports whether there is a probable cause for holding him over the foulest crime New England ever saw.

And it was to have been his wedding day!

For more than two weeks New England has been appalled by a crime that seemed incredible. A grand murder had been done. A trusting girl, young, talented, happy-hearted and with the love for life that animates healthy humanity, was killed by a fiend.

That was the first shock that awed the public. Then came the suspicion that the crime was perpetrated by a clergyman—a man who preached charity and love and peace. New England, a church-going people, asked in whispers: "Can it be? Can it be?"

Climax Comes To-day.

The Rev. Mr. Richeson was arrested and locked in a steel cell of the Charles Street Jail. He is young, a Lord Byron in looks, a Chesterfield in ordinary deportment, an Aaron Burr in fascinating characteristics.

The stage was set for one of the most tragic dramas that was ever played on or off the stage. Scene after scene has been unfolded before the wondering eyes of the people since the clergyman's arrest. The climax is reached to-day!

Richeson was to have been married this evening to Miss Violet Edmands, the daughter of one of the most prominent residents of Brookline. Miss Edmands is a college graduate and eminently fitted to become the wife of any clergyman. She and her family were happy in the event that had been prepared for with such loving solicitude.

An Eventful October 31st.

More than 700 invitations had been sent out for this wedding. The bride-to-be had spent much thought on her wedding gown. It had been ordered, fitted, refitted and finished. And then came the heart-breaking, soul-crushing shock.

The wedding dress hangs like a white badge of grief in one of the rooms of a Back Bay modiste. Miss Edmands has not seen it since her great trouble came—she will never look upon it again, in all probability.

And there is another wedding dress. It was not made by the expert fingers of skilled needlewomen. It was made by Avis Linnell, almost all herself, for she, too, was to have been the bride of the clergyman. Into the white gown Avis Linnell sewed her heart. Her girl friends in Hyannis watched her and gazed with limpid eyes at the flurry—dumb, but endowed with the richness that transcendent love gives to most commonplace things on earth.

And where is that wedding dress? It is wrapped about the chilled form of the little girl asleep in the quiet churchyard of Hyannis. It is a shroud, crumbling away in a casket!

This irony of Fate began early for Richeson in the Charles Street Jail. He awoke with the sun, made his toilet and ate his breakfast. He had been informed that he would have to appear in court. He made himself in readiness for the ordeal. He was pale but calm.

A dispatch from Lynchburg, Va., to-day, states that John T. Lee, one of the most famous criminal lawyers in the South, is on his way to Boston. It is thought he is coming to Boston to assist in handling Pastor Richeson's defence.

Seek Marriage Record.

The police have been working for several days trying to find a record or some other clew to a clandestine marriage between the accused and the victim.

No trace of such a marriage was found and the Linnell girl's parents could not remember ever having seen her wear a wedding ring. The prosecution has easily established that Avis Linnell and Pastor Richeson were at one time engaged but it has been seeking to prove whether or not the minister was really her husband.

Mrs. Ethel Brown of Whitman says that while she was in Hyannis in the Summer of 1910 she helped write and address announcements of Avis's engagement to the young pastor, but she does not know whether they were sent out. The news pleased everybody, and at the request of the Linnell family Mrs. Brown said she aided in "writing hundreds of announcements."

"I always supposed they had been circulated," added Mrs. Brown. "There is no question about the engagement of the couple."

Trace Pastor's Life.

Mrs. Brown has not been summoned before the Grand Jury. It is thought by many that following this announcement the clergyman and the pretty member of his choir may have gone to some neighboring town and married.

In order to forestall any possibility of an insanity plea District-Attorney Pelletier has inquired searchingly into the habits, mannerisms and eccentricities of Richeson. So many stories have reached him of the young clergyman's odd behavior at times that he brought in medical experts to throw light on the prisoner's mental and physical status.

Detectives in the employ of the defence are in Hyannis and neighboring towns collecting evidence concerning Richeson's conduct. In Hyannis they are trying to find persons who recall a time when the pastor of the little Baptist Church was seen lingering through the woods, hatless and coatless and wildly swinging his arms.

Intimations that the prisoner might have been in the habit of taking morphine or some other drug, which aroused to gain some force by the idiosyncracies of the accused clergyman which had been frequently brought to the attention of the authorities, prompted the prosecution to disclose to its satisfaction of that element of the case.

With that end in view, every person likely to have any knowledge of the purchase, sale or use of morphine or any other drug by the prisoner has been seen by the authorities and their evidence is entirely negative.

While there is ample testimony in the hands of the prosecution to show peculiarities of mind that render the defendant psychologically one of the most unique mental types ever with which the authorities have had to deal in this State, there is no evidence tending to show that his mental condition was in any way due to an addiction to any drug habit.

Abandon Messenger Idea.

Physicians, druggists, intimate friends and neighbors in his parish have been questioned regarding this aspect of the case, but no one has been found who would say he ever saw or knew of the minister under charge of murder taking any drug.

Although the prosecution has left no stone unturned they have been unable in ten days of the most rigid inquiry and three days of deliberations before the Grand Jury to place the accused minister in the company of Avis Linnell on the day before she died by any direct evidence. Consequently the Government will have to charge that he either gave her the poison on some previous day, or that he mailed it. The police do not appear to attach much weight to the possibility of a messenger having figured in the transaction. The lack of evidence in this respect is the gravest obstacle that confronts the prosecution, for it will create problems similar to those that beset the Government in the case against Molineux.

FOUND RICHESON BORROWED IDEAS IN THEME WRITING

It has been learned that when Pastor Richeson applied for admission to Newton Theological Institute, he told the Rev. Nathan E. Wood, who was then president, that he was a graduate of William Jewell College. He was believed upon his word, and his name was allowed to appear in the catalogue as graduating from that college. When the registrar, Dr. Hinckley, asked him if he came from that college he also replied in the affirmative.

He was expelled from that college and did not graduate. Then he came in the Fall of the year 1906 to Boston and was employed in different ways until he entered the Institute. While studying for the ministry he preached in several pulpits in Cambridge.

Rev. Mr. Richeson took the degree of B. D. from Newton Theological Institute.

How to Safely Peel Your Face

(From Beauty Culture)

If you have a muddy, sallow or blotchy complexion, the most sensible thing to do is to remove it—rather than to patch it over or "doctor" it with any cosmetic, rouge or lotion. The only way to really remove the complexion—aside from resorting to an expensive and painful surgical operation—is by means of ordinary mercolized wax. Spread the wax over the face, as you would cold cream, washing it off in the morning. It gradually absorbs the lifeless and the half-dead outer skin, in minute, almost invisible particles—and gradually the fresh young skin beneath beams forth. Then you have a clear, smooth, velvety, healthy-hued complexion, such as no unnatural method can possibly produce.

Surface defects due to weather, ill health or the ravages of time, of course disappear with the discarded skin. Ask the druggist for an ounce of pure mercolized wax; this is usually sufficient.

Advice to Those of Baggy Cheek and Chin

(From Pilgrim Magazine)

Let the woman whose cheek muscles are beginning to sag and who by the same token is acquiring a double chin, remember to keep her head up, is the advice of a celebrated beauty expert. Let her bathe her face, neck and chin in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. The result will surprise her, the lotion being so quickly effective. This treatment tightens and reduces skin and muscles, also strengthening and toning up the same.

Naturally the tightening effect disperses wrinkles and furrows. The lotion is very refreshing. Be sure to ask the druggist for the powdered saxolite.

LOTS OF SOFT, FLUFFY, LUSTROUS HAIR AND NEVER ANY DANDRUFF

You can double the beauty of your hair in ten minutes with a little Danderine

When you see a head of heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, you can at once conclude that this man or woman is using Danderine, because nothing else accomplishes so much for the hair.

Just one application of Knowlton's Danderine will double the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately destroys and dissolves every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy or too oily, don't hesitate, but get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter; apply a little as directed and in a few minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually—why not now? A 25 cent bottle will truly amaze you.

1900 and wrote upon the theme "The Sorrow Idea of God." This gained for him the degree. The essay he wrote was considered a very learned one. It was submitted upon by several of the professors, until it was found out he had borrowed many thoughts in it from a well known German theologian.

This was not discovered until after the degree had been given him, and a committee was made that he should take up post graduate course, which he did for a year.

"The Hebrew Idea of God," it appeared, is taken largely from "Christology of the Old Testament" by Hengstenberg. This is pointed out afterwards by one of the professors, but it was brushed up and methods more was said about it until within a week.

ARNOLD'S RENO DIVORCE NO GOOD

Brookline society had plenty to talk about today when it became known that Mrs. Alice May Felker-Arnold had won her divorce suit against Sheffield A. Arnold, a noted landscape architect, also of Brookline but is a favorite in Boston and Brookline society.

In winning her divorce, which was granted by Judge Hardy, Mrs. Arnold had not aside the divorce obtained by Arnold in Reno, Nev., shortly after which he married Mrs. Virginia Edwards, a beautiful blonde. Mrs. Arnold also was awarded $500 alimony of $18 a week and the custody of her son.

Not content with instituting divorce proceedings, the first Mrs. Arnold also instituted an action against Mrs. Virginia Arnold for the alienation of her husband's affections, asking $10,000 in the amount of damages. This suit is yet to be tried and the testimony is expected to be full of sensational as that in the divorce case, which a pair of pink pongee pajamas, which is alleged the then prominently figured in the case, and which was presented to Arnold, proved prominently.

The first Mrs. Arnold and the bride were married in 1894, when the latter was but sixteen years old, the former a little older. Marital unhappiness is gossip, but held was a matter of which was talked of when, in 1910, Arnold suspected that Nevada, it was not going the purpose of he had gone there for, and after separating himself from him his decree.

Immediately after Mrs. Edwards' decree there Arnold accuses whom the first Mrs. Arnold had having had a Arnold and her artist. The present at the home of Arnold husband are Brookline district of Brighton street, the former Mrs. Arnold is living ton. The former and son at No. 56 King with her mother street, Jamaicaway.

COMMON GARDEN SAGE RESTORES GRAY AND FADED HAIR TO ITS NATURAL COLOR.

The old idea of using sage for darkening the hair is again coming in vogue. Our grandmothers used to have dark, glossy hair at the age of seventy-five, while our mothers have white hair before they are fifty. Our grandmothers used to make a "sage tea" and apply it to their hair. The tea made their hair soft and glossy, and gradually restored the natural color.

One objection to using such a preparation was the trouble of making it, especially as it had to be made every two or three days, on account of souring quickly. This objection has been overcome, and by asking almost any first-class druggist for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy the public can get a superior preparation of sage, with the admixture of sulphur, another valuable remedy for hair and scalp troubles. Daily use of this preparation will not only quickly restore the color of the hair, but will also stop the hair from falling out and make it grow.

Get a bottle from your druggist today. Use it and see for yourself how quickly dandruff goes and gray hairs vanish.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists

HELOISE MEYER FIRST WOMAN ON LENOX VOTING LIST

Miss Meyer is the sister of Secretary of the Navy George Von L. Meyer, and is popular in Boston society. She is known as a daring cross-country rider.

LENOX, Oct. 31.—The woman suffrage movement in this town has been given a decided impetus by the acquisition of Miss Heloise Meyer, sister of Secretary of the Navy Meyer. Miss Meyer has been formally registered as a voter in this town and will thus have an opportunity to vote next spring for members of the school committee.

Other society women, it is expected, will follow her example.

Miss Meyer is a legal resident of Lenox and has an estate here, although she spends a good part of the time in Boston and New York, where she is popular in society. She is known as a daring cross-country rider and always takes part in the runs of the Lenox Hunt Club.

DENIES SOUL IS IMMORTAL

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 31.—Professor Max Verworm of the University of Bonn, a German celebrity, in addressing the 700 faculty men and medical students of the University of Pennsylvania that the individual soul is no more than a unit of the individual body. Most of his auditors were Christians. To these the German scholar held out no hope for a life after death, except in the deeds that earthly life leaves behind. "At all times and in all places," he said, "Life and death go hand in hand.

"What, then, is immortal? Life? Surely not. At most there is only a continuity of living substance, but this also had a beginning and an end 'dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return.'

"This is true of all living substance, even the one-celled amoeba to the most gifted man.

"What of the immortality of the soul? Our individual soul is no more immortal than our individual body.

"The idea of the continuance of life after death originated not later than with the uncivilized men of the New Stone Age.

"Here may be clearly recognized the idea of the continuance of life after death. Here clearly appears the conception of dualism of body and mind. Here we find the dispiriting idea of an invisible dominion of the soul, an idea which has given rise to dark facts of faith in spirits, demons and gods. Here contemplation of the fear of death evoked a host of fanciful notions, among which faith in immortality is the child of the soul and the idea of the god of immortality ensued, after manifold transformations, the forms with which we are all familiar today."

NO-LICENSE IS LAUDED BY ELIOT

That no-license in certain parts of Massachusetts has been successful in bringing around economic results and diminishing crime was the statement of Dr. Charles W. Eliot at the fifth annual dinner of the Anti-Saloon League of Massachusetts in Ford Hall.

Dr. Eliot, who is an honorary member of the league, congratulated the gathering on the progress made and results achieved by the league.

"Our gain in the last five years," he said, "has been substantial enough. In a few cities and towns we have had the great satisfaction in successive years of seeing a city of town adhere to the policy of no-license.

"But as we survey the whole State of Massachusetts we have to admit that the progress of this cause is painfully slow. On the other hand, the success of no-license in bringing economic results and diminishing crime has been shown over and over again. This is an ethical movement, and also truly a religious movement, if ever there was one."

ARCHBISHOP IS PLANNING TRIP

Archbishop O'Connell is making preparations for his journey to the Vatican, where on November 27 he will be one of the three American cardinals proclaimed by Pope Pius X. It is possible that Mgr. Falconio and Archbishop Farley will make the journey to Rome with him.

It is now believed there will be on November 27 two consistories in Rome, a private one early in the morning and a public consistory in the forenoon.

At the first consistory, which will be held in the Hall of Consistory, near the famous Sistine Chapel, the seventeen new cardinals will be elevated to the dignities as princes of the church. Upon the indications at this time it is supposed that soon after, on the same morning, the public consistory will be held and the oath imposing extent the red hat will be conferred on each of the new cardinals.

Assigned Titular Church.

Church law provides that the conferring of the red hat can be delayed until anytime until the consistory at which takes place of the proclaiming of the cardinals, but it is quite certain that no time will be lost by the present instance. This is thought to be on account of the large number of Cardinals and the fact that they come from scattered portions of the world.

Archbishop O'Connell, according to a close dispatch, will be assigned to the Titular Church of Santa Susanna, as others of the convent of the Benedictine nuns. This was the titular church of the late Cardinal Moran of Australia. It was erected in 1903, and its interior is richly ornamented with frescoes. The chapel dedicated to St. Lawrence and the tomb of Cardinal Perelli, sister of Pope Sixtus V., adjoining the church is the property of American Cardinals.

Comments on the approaching consistory emphasize the great significance of the Pope's decision in granting such a large representation by the American College to the United States. It is even pointed out that the war is being waged by the Vatican against Pope.

Archbishop O'Connell made the following statement regarding his selection:

Expression of Gratitude.

To-day I have received official communications from Cardinal Gotti, Secretary of State, stating that our Holy Father, Pius X, will raise me to the dignity of the Cardinalate at the coming Consistory, November 27.

To fittingly acquire of this testimonial of paternal affection on the part of His Holiness toward me, my first thought is one of immeasurable gratitude toward the Vicar of Christ, who, from the very beginning of the Pontificate, has, notwithstanding my own unworthiness, given me renewed and constant tokens of his esteem and affection.

Until now I have been forced on account of the delicacy of the situation to keep silence. But while my lips were sealed my ears and eyes were wide open, and the beautiful and touching words which have been written and said of me and my poor efforts for members of the Church and my own dear country and city, have enriched me most profoundly.

If I have done aught by word and work in the past, I shall do more in a tenth of such touching devotion and affection, as a good part of the time to Boston and New York, where she is popular in society. She is known as a daring cross-country rider and always takes part in the runs of the Lenox Hunt Club.

She is known as a daring cross-country rider and always takes part in the runs of the Lenox Hunt Club.

With this greater honor comes greater responsibilities and larger duties to the church, to the Holy See, and to all America. With a heart encouraged by the love and favor of the Holy See, and to all America. With a heart encouraged by the love and favor of the Holy See, and to all America. When the most brilliant assortment of Fall and Winter Clothes that Boston men have ever seen will be thrown open for your inspection and selection. Enormous in numbers, indeed it is too large, owing to unfortunate conditions that have confronted us.

We expected to remain in our old Summer street store until our new building was completed, but on the contrary we were forced to occupy an out-of-the-way temporary location for the past month, with a consequent sacrifice of a great part of our usual Fall business. To make up for this and to lessen our overplus of stock, we have priced every garment in this vast assemblage of ultra-English and American styles far lower than it should be. We have marked them in many cases far lower than ordinary readymades would cost you—just think, for GEORGES Famous CUSTOM MODEL CLOTHES. Don't miss the Opening.

your pockets. The cost of living is increasing because a Republican President vetoed the measures of relief that the Democrats and the progressive Republicans forced through Congress in response to the public sentiment which is nation wide.

"To-day that President, after a trip of 14,000 miles through the country, after meeting and touching elbows with millions of his fellow countrymen and having their views expressed to him after he has made his explanations and apologies for his action, is forced to admit that the feat will greet the Republican party next year in its presidential campaign because of its failure to keep its pledges and give a fair tariff to the people.

"President Taft to-day knows that his party does defeat and publicly admits it. He does this after listening to millions of his fellow countrymen who have told him that his policy is all wrong.

Crisis Now at Hand.

"It is a crisis, as he admits, but one brought on by the broken pledges of the Republican party, which promised revision downward and gave a revision upward, and when the relief the people demanded was secured by the Democrats President Taft vetoed the bills and the cost of living at once jumped another 10 per cent. And now Republican orators ask me if I, or you: Aren't prices higher this year than last? Has Foss made good?

"They are higher, and they will go yet higher until your investors will become almost unattainable luxuries if you do not again register your protest this Fall and vote against these high prices and intolerable conditions. By endorsing my stand for an honest tariff, with free raw materials, you will open up a new era of prosperity for every Massachusetts industry.

"Why, the President's own admission shows to you that the Republican party is going down to overwhelming defeat. And Mr. Norman White, a recent candidate for the gubernatorial nomination on the Republican ticket, says that he will be sorry to see the Republican party lose, but that if they do lose it is because they have brought it on themselves. He refuses to go on the platform to advocate the success of the party which he hoped to lead to victory. The Fall election he sees the handwriting on the wall.

Seeks Only Square Deal.

"Give us your votes again this Fall. Let Massachusetts take no backward step. You strook the first blow at the high cost of living.

"The revolt against the Payne-Aldrich iniquity started here in Massachusetts.

"It has spread all over the country, President Taft finds it so. It is increasing and not diminishing until a year before the presidential contest he admits defeat. 'All we ask is a square deal. A square deal that our industries may flourish. A square deal that our operatives may not regard the future with misgiving nor be compelled to deny themselves and their families of the necessities of life.

"We have practically a Republican cabinet. They admit defeat from the President down to a recent candidate for gubernatorial honors. They have thrown up the sponge and the only question is the size of the Democratic majority.

"Give me a Democratic Legislature that I may secure more progressive legislation and carry out the policies that will build up our industries and develop our resources.

"Don't hamper me by allowing a Republican Legislature to throttle my efforts to secure this legislation that means so much to Massachusetts."

Walsh on Party Designation.

David I. Walsh, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, speaking for direct nominations, said:

"Wherever I have appeared on the platform during this campaign I have found no keener interest in any public question than in the position taken by the Democratic party on the abolition of party designation as now required by the direct primary law. There can be doubt as to the question but what people are overwhelmingly in favor of a change in this law.

"The fact that the Democratic party in its platform advocates this change indicates in this respect, as in other respects, its closeness to the people.

"Any one familiar with conditions in the Commonwealth, anybody in touch with what the voters were thinking and talking about just before and after the direct primary election could not help but be impressed with the widespread feeling that some change should be made.

"Appreciating this resentment to certain provisions of that law the Democratic party has taken the position, that if it is placed in power next year, it will correct the objectionable features of this law.

What the Law Means.

"Now I want you to know exactly what this new primary law means. It applies to all offices to be filled at State election, excepting the office of presidential elector, and the election of district members of State committees, members of ward and town committees, and of delegates to State conventions of political parties.

"You must declare to what party you belong before you can vote at a primary election.

"If you declare yourself a Democrat or a Republican you must remain a Democrat or Republican except by taking a conscientiously described.

"You cannot sign the nomination paper of any man who does not belong to your party.

"If you do not enroll yourself with some party, if you cancel your enrollment, you cannot sign any nomination paper.

"If you wish to change your party, it will take you ninety days to do it.

"If you make this change you must go to your city or town clerk and make your request for a change in writing.

"If you have your enrollment cancelled, you can not vote at any primary until the expiration of one year from date of cancellation.

"The objections to this direct primary law are:

"It destroys in a measure the secrecy for the sake of which the Australian ballot system was inaugurated.

How the Bosses Win.

"It gives the political and employment bosses their old opportunity to terrorize the voters.

"It requires every voter who wishes to change his party to humiliate himself by going to the town clerk and declaring in writing his desire for such a change.

"It is so devised as to practically disfranchise at the primaries a large majority of the voters of the Commonwealth.

"It is the fundamental right of every American citizen to vote at the primaries as well as at the general election, as he pleases, and it was never designed that he should in any case place himself under the domination of any political party or any boss. If he surrenders any part of this right it will not be long before he will find himself completely enslaved again so far as his franchise is concerned.

"I stand pledged to do my utmost to bring about a change in this law. I want such a condition of things that when I go to the polling place and some official asks me what party I belong to, I can tell him it is none of his business.

"When I go to vote I propose to be accountable to no one except God and my own conscience."

Donahue Assails Lodgeism.

"This fight in which we are engaged," said Frank J. Donahue, candidate for Secretary of State, "is not a fight between parties, and it will not be decided on party lines when the independent thinking voters of this Commonwealth will unite to give Eugene N. Foss one of the largest pluralities ever given to a candidate for Governor in Massachusetts. The forces of Treasure, subjection and Lodgeism are making their last desperate stand in this Commonwealth this year. So desperate have they become that they are willing to sacrifice all the rest of their ticket to elect its head.

"But we are not attacking any Republican candidate on personal grounds. We are attacking Republican candidates simply because of the system they represent; a system which has for years successfully resisted the efforts of the plain every-day people of the Commonwealth to obtain laws to better their condition and add to their personal comfort.

"There can be no free making of laws in this Commonwealth by the representatives of the people so long as Henry Cabot Lodge is allowed to dominate the Republican party.

"The will of the people never will be freely expressed by legislation so long as corporation lobbyists are allowed an influential part in the affairs of the Republican State Committee. It is this system we are fighting. If to this system the 47,000 independent thinking Republicans expressed their disapproval of at the primaries by casting their votes for Joseph Walker and Norman H. White.

"Thousands more Republicans would have added to these had it not been for that pernicious and un-American provision of the direct nominations act which compels a voter to announce his party before he may vote in the primaries. That fore he may vote in the primaries. That provision of law is a part of the system which we are fighting. It was put in there to discourage a free participation of the voters in the primaries.

"Free participation of the voters in the nominating process would mean that the people and not the political machine would do the nominating. My opponent for the office of Secretary of the Commonwealth is a part and parcel of this system.

Attacks Langtry's Record.

"There is absolutely nothing to the public record of the present Secretary of State which entitles him to consideration at the hands of the voters. As a member of the Legislature he was consistently recorded against measures in behalf of the plain people of the Commonwealth, as:

"(1) A measure of such importance to the working men and women of this State as the fifty-four hour law for women and minors he was not recorded; he voted against the eight-hour bill for employes on public works; he voted against the referendum of United States Senators, and against the Oregon plan for a referendum vote by the people on United States Senators; he voted against the initiative and referendum; he voted against the publicity-in-politics bill, which would allow the voters to instruct their Senators and Representatives on questions of public policy; he voted against the bill to limit the use of injunctions in labor disputes; he voted against the bill to allow appeals in cases of contempt of court; he voted against the bill to allow labor unions to enforce their rules by imposing fines upon their members; he voted against the bill to compel street railway companies to equip their cars with safety fenders, and (8) voted against the income tax.

"To this a record of devotion to the public interests or devotion to private interests? Is there anything in this record that entitles Mr. Langtry to preferment at the hands of the voters of this Commonwealth? It is not rather a record that calls for rebuke by enlightened public opinion?"

Anderson Attacks Swift.

G. W. Anderson, Democratic candidate for Attorney-General, quoted a letter sent on July 3, 1911, by Governor Foss to Attorney General Swift, directing his attention specifically to some of the evils of the United Shoe Machine Company's monopoly and to the harm it was working to the shoe-manufacturing industry. In that letter, said Mr. Anderson, Governor Foss asked Attorney General Swift three questions:

"(1) Whether the existing laws were sufficient to enable the Attorney General to destroy or curb this monopoly.

"(2) Whether the recent purchase of the competing machinery plant was in violation of existing law.

"(3) If the existing law was insufficient, what other or further legislation was necessary or expedient to curb or break the power of this monopoly.

To these questions Mr. Anderson said, Attorney-General Swift answered: 'From a legal standpoint, and as a basis for an opinion that would be of any value whatever, I am unable to find in our laws anything that permits or enables me to come to any conclusion. It contains no statement of facts or evidence such as is necessary as a basis for legal conclusions of an opinion.

"This answer," commented Mr. Anderson, 'was properly construed by the Governor as stating the position of the Attorney-General that he could form no opinion as to prosecuting this trust unless and until the Governor furnished the evidence.

Lashes Republican Laxity.

"Attorney-General Swift in the same letter stated with substantial accuracy the existing anti-trust law found in the statutes of Massachusetts, including the general anti-trust Act of 1908, and then said: 'Obviously this statute is of broad application. It is impossible for me, however, to advise you either as to the possible outcome of a proceeding brought thereunder against the corporation to which you refer, or as to the legality of the contract in question referring to the purchase of the Thomas G. Plant competing line with out having a complete knowledge of the facts relating to the transaction.' He therefore suggested that the Governor should furnish him with the evidence.

"Apparently," continued Mr. Anderson, "Mr. Swift holds to the old-time republican doctrine as to [illegible] related enforcement, of the [illegible] of which the recent prosecution of the United States Steel Corporation is an example. This trust was formed about ten years ago, under the Roosevelt administration, during two years and six months of the Taft administration no one ever dreamed of any manipulation to unload its watered stock upon the innocent investing public. But now Judge Gary is shedding crocodile tears for the injury that will be done innocent investors by this conformation of the Sherman act. The time to enforce the law is when the law is being broken and after the results of the breach has been unloaded upon perfectly innocent persons.

"There is now in process of promotion, at great interest to the wage-earners of this Commonwealth, a bread trust, called the General Baking Company. The promoters of this bread trust are fully justified in the belief that they will meet no obstacle in their promotion from Attorney General Swift.

GOV. FOSS ASKS SQUARE DEAL SO OUR INDUSTRIES MAY FLOURISH

"Give us your votes again this Fall. Let Massachusetts take no backward step. You struck the first blow at the high cost of living. The revolt against the Payne-Aldrich iniquity started here in Massachusetts. It has spread all over the country. President Taft finds that it is increasing and not diminishing, until a year before the presidential contest he admits defeat.

"All we ask is a square deal; a square deal that our industries may flourish; a square deal that our operatives may not regard the future with misgiving nor be compelled to deny themselves and their families the necessaries of life."—Governor Foss in speech at Lawrence to-day.

POTHIER FLAYED BY WATERMAN

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—The rousing Democratic State campaign will be given renewed impetus at two big rallies tonight at which Lewis A. Waterman, candidate for Governor, and others on the State ticket will speak.

One rally will be in Palace Casino, Arcadia square, this city. The other will be in Foresters' Hall, Pawtucket.

In addition to Mr. Waterman the speakers will include Alberic A. Archambault, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor; Thomas A. Cahill, candidate for Attorney General and Albert M. Steinert, candidate for State Treasurer.

In addition to these rallies for the State ticket there will be district rallies throughout the State at which the local candidates for the Assembly will be heard.

The Democratic campaign is in full manner and enthusiastic audiences are greeting the speakers on every night.

At four crowded and enthusiastic rallies Mr. Waterman and the other candidates on the State ticket attacked the administration of Governor Aram J. Pothier for its aggressive legislation it has adopted, as well as for the conservative policies it has ignored.

The rallies were held at Phillipsdale, where Aram Mowry, candidate for Representative, presided; at East Providence, where Senator Arthur Johnson presided; at the town Hall in Warren, the guests of the town Hall in Warren, where Dr. T. G. Morrison was the presiding officer, and at Colonial hall in Bristol, where enthusiastic crowd waited before, and before and where Ward Chair man Thomas R. Rhea served as presiding officer.

Given Rousing Reception.

The democratic candidate for Governor declared the record of the Republican party showed that his party had opposed every attempt to put progressive legislation upon the books in the interest of the people.

"Rhode Island is behind every other state in the Union in the matter of legislation for the masses," he said, "and it is simply because the party of the interests has dominated the State's politics, life and in part.

"The Governor has now again ventured to state his position. It says he stands upon his record. Let his opponents assail it. Well, what is his record?

"Opposition to the weekly payment bill a number of years ago.

"Opposition to the abolition of the property qualification, also a number of years ago.

"Approving an act relating to the lobster hatchery at Wickford, whereby the State lost the services of several extremely efficient servants.

"The approval of an act whereby Cranston had a city charter forced upon it without the consent of the people of that town.

Makes Analysis of Record.

"Changing the date of the town meeting of North Kingston against the protest of a great many of the citizens of that town.

"Forcing police commissions upon the city of Newport and the town of Westerly without the consent of the voters of said places.

"And the worth of a candidate must depend not only upon what he has done, but also upon what he has failed to do and upon what he stands for.

"Governor Pothier has failed to advocate the abolition of the property qualification, also a number of years ago.

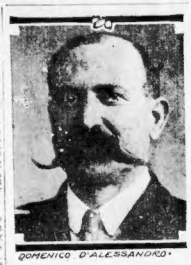
D'ALESSANDRO, LABOR LEADER, OUT FOR FOSS

Cav. Domnick D'Alessandro, general president of the International Hod Carriers and Building Laborers' Union, and knighted by the King of Italy in 1905 for his anti-padrone work among the Italian-speaking residents of this country, in an exclusive interview given the AMERICAN to-day, unreservedly comes out for Governor Foss' re-election.

The great D'Alessandro is one of the best known and most influential Italian-speaking citizens on this side of the Atlantic. The high honor conferred upon him by the King of Italy, coupled with his standing in the labor movement, makes his endorsement of Governor Foss a matter of State-wide importance. President of East Boston, but temporarily located at Albany, he will come to Boston from the mid-united city at great personal inconvenience on election day to vote for Foss.



DOMENICO D'ALESSANDRO.

Remarkable Record.

This noted labor leader made it clear in the interview given the AMERICAN that he didn't favor Governor Foss because of any partisanship. His distinctly states that he does not regard as a Democrat. But, realizing that Massachusetts has made greater progress under the leadership of Foss during the last year than any other State in the nation, he urges every workingman to vote for his re-election as a means to secure still further progressive legislation.

"Governor Foss should be re-elected by the largest majority ever given a candidate for Governor in this State, because of what he has done and what he proposes to do for the everyday citizen of this Commonwealth," declared President D'Alessandro, when seen by a representative of the AMERICAN at the Union headquarters on Hanover street to-day.

"As a resident of Boston, I find that while my business carries me to almost every State in the union and necessarily keeps me in touch with labor legislation the country over, I feel safe in saying that under Governor Foss we have accomplished more for the uplift of humanity than has any other State, in this, or any other country—it's a wonderful record."

Voters are Real Bosses.

"I don't care to discuss Frothingham's personality. That doesn't enter into the race at this time. Neither do I want to have anyone think that I favor the re-election of Governor Foss for party reasons. It is right of this character principle counts for far more than either party or personality.

"If a member of the union goes out looking for a job, the boss doesn't ask him what political party he trains with. The boss doesn't even need to inquire if the fellow looking for work was born in any particular country. He wants to know what the job-hunter purposes to do in the way of his day's wages, and whether or not the man is physically and mentally fit to perform the work required of him.

"In this instance, the voters are out looking for a job, as Governor. And being a part of the business, I can't see why we find with my "hired man's" qualifications for the job before looking for him. In other words, his work in the past has been satisfactory that I'm willing to employ him for another twelve months at the prevailing rate of wages.

"It's a matter of utter indifference to me whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. The question is, has he done his work, as Governor, the way we wanted him to do it while he has been in our employ, and will he continue to respect the wishes of his collective employers in the future? In short, has he done well, and that he will continue to do well. That's why I'm going to cast my vote in his favor.

Foss's Service for Labor.

"Since Foss was elected twelve months ago he has given us a fifty-four hour law for women and children, a workable eight-hour law, a law granting a trial by jury to alleged violators of injunctions, a workingmen's compensation law, direct nominations, anti-sun shark law, a commission to investigate wage conditions for working women with a view to the establishment of a legal minimum wage, and many other progressive measures. That makes a pretty good year's work, when compared with what we have been accustomed to get from other men who held the same job down in the past.

"Again, Governor Foss pledges himself to work for a department of labor, to abolish competition between free labor and prison labor, to give us a commonsense system of direct legislation, to protect first offenders from contamination in our reformatories, and to have the question of equal suffrage submitted to a popular vote, as well as taking a positive stand on other much needed reforms. That's a pretty good list of things, and good year's work he has laid out for himself in the impending term.

Curse of Padrone System.

"I have travelled all over the country during the last year, and have made careful inquiries in every State visited as to what was being done in the line of labor legislation, but in no instance have I found a Governor who accomplished as much for the everyday man in one year as Governor Foss has accomplished in this State.

"There was a time in the industrial history of my countrymen when the dread padrone used to dominate. His will was absolute, and the laborer had to do as the padrone ordered or take the consequences. Independent action was impossible, and the men's lives were worth but a living.

"But bad as conditions were in the industrial world under the padrone system, they could not be any worse than they have been under the political padrone that dominated this and many other States in our nation before the advent of men of the Governor Foss type.

"The padrone-cursed laborers got rid of their industrial despot by combining together for mutual protection, as trade unionists. And the moment they commenced to do their own thinking and to make their own bargains with the bosses, they commenced to get better working conditions and higher wages.

"To-morrow the voters of this State get together and rid themselves of their political padrones, they, too, commenced to get the equivalent of higher wages and better working conditions in the form of advanced legislation.

"No man would be so lacking in common sense as to go out in the open and preach a return to the padrone system in the industrial world of to-day. It wouldn't be a safe thing to do, no matter how much he protested that he wasn't an enemy of the leaders who used to prey upon the necessities of poor workingmen.

TAFT ADMITS FEAR OF DEFEAT

PITTSBURG, Oct. 31.—Pittsburg's Republican politicians received President Taft to-day with feelings of poorly concealed chagrin because of his admission at the dinner of the Hamilton Club in Chicago that he fears a defeat for the Republican party and himself.

Pennsylvania politicians fear the results of the President's openly expressed pessimism. That his tour has not been a glittering success politically has been well known, but his public admission that he fears defeat stunned them. Fear was expressed that the effect the President's "throwing up the sponge," as politicians here express it, will be disastrous to the party in the State campaigns now on, especially in Massachusetts, where Senators Lodge and Crane are making the G. O. P. fight almost wholly on an endorsement of President Taft.

Taft is Pessimistic.

At Chicago the President had laid the corner stone of the new Hamilton club home and was speaking to what had promised to be an unusually enthusiastic audience of Republicans.

"Now we are at—some people think—the crisis in the Republican party, with reference to its continuance in the guidance of the nation," he said. "I am hopeful that the good people of the country, when they come to think things over, they see it, have only clustered us in an off year, in order that we may be better hereafter—but with no intention of shifting their allegiance and of leaving to others the burdens of the present problems and cares. Then in a successful election, let those which are untried and which have new theories of running the country, see believe in, and that we don't believe the people believe that.

Sees a "Death Parade."

"However, if so be it that they desire to make a change, we shall loyally support the new government under any conditions, with the hope it will inure to the benefit of the country, but with the consolation, that, if after one trial the people think they ought to go back to the old party that has served them so well in the progressive days of the nation, they will do so—we can bear that, my friends, that is all."

A "death parade" of miners, an explosion in a coal mine and a demonstration of electric work were among the features of the President's entertainment today. To-night he speaks before the Chamber of Commerce.

FUNERAL OF JUDGE FERNALD THURSDAY

The funeral of Judge B. Marvin Fernald, associate justice of the Malden District Court, will be held Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. from his home at No. 53 Youle street, Melrose. His death followed an illness of several months. Judge Fernald was graduated from Harvard in 1870 and immediately entered the law office of Joseph T. Wiggin on State street, Boston. He was admitted to the bar in 1872, and became in partner of the firm of Wiggin & Fernald. He was elected to the Legislature in 1881 and 1882, and served in the Senate in 1891 and 1892, being chairman of the Judiciary committee. He was a member of Hugh de Payens Commandery, R. T., Worshipful Lodge of Masons, Waverly Chapter, Melrose Council, Royal and Select Masters, Middlesex Club of Boston, Melrose Highlands Club.

B. T. WASHINGTON RAPS WHITE MAN'S GREED

NEWBURGH, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Booker T. Washington has no faith in the white man permitting his colored brethren to get a dollar ahead so long as the white man can get a chance at it first. Last night, as the guest of Dr. Lyman Abbott at Cornwall, he spoke along these lines to the largest assemblage ever gathered in the village. Dr. Abbott introduced him. Dr. Washington said a great many prominent men expressed their opinion that the negro race should be kept to itself. Dr. Washington said it would need many walls to keep the white men out, as they would be afraid they would miss a dollar, which they are always after.

KAISER BESTOWS HONOR ON FLEXNER

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Physicians and scientists here are greatly interested over a cablegram from Berlin announcing that Dr. Simon Flexner of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research had been appointed by Emperor William of Germany to honorary membership in the Royal Institute for Experimental Therapeutics of Frankford-on-the-Main. This is considered a high honor by scientific men the world over. The Institute is considered one of the leading medical authorities of the world, and only such men as have attained exceptional rank are admitted to membership.

TAFT HINTS THAT HE EXPECTS DEFEAT FOR REPUBLICANS

I am hopeful that the good people of the country, who know a good thing when they see it, have only clustered us in an off year in order that we may be better hereafter.

However, if so be it that they desire to make a change, we shall loyally support the new government under any conditions with the hope it will inure to the benefit of the country, but with the consolation that, if after one trial the people think they ought to go back to the old party that has served them so well in the progressive days of the nation, they will do so—we can bear that, my friends, that is all."

From President Taft's speech at Hamilton Club dinner in Chicago.

EXPLOSIONS CAUSE PANIC

Scollay square was thrown into a panic by gas explosions in three manholes. The square was crowded at the time. Several women fainted, horses became frightened and ran away, and there was general confusion.

Edward T. Currant, the innocent cause of the explosions, was the principal sufferer. He was blown several feet into the air, his clothing caught fire and he was badly burned. His hair was burned off.

Currant, who lives at No. 439 Quincy street, Dorchester, is employed by the telephone company as a cable man. He was not aware of a leak in the big gas main in Hanover street, and the explosion occurred when he, sitting on the edge of the hole, lowered a lantern into it. Currant was thrown several feet and his clothes were ignited by the flash of flame.

Let Us Tell You a Secret About Lowney's Cook Book

When the Lowney Co. decided to publish a New Cook Book they looked about for The Woman Who Stood Highest in the Profession of Cooking in this country. They found her in Maria Willett Howard, former Principal of the Boston Cooking School, and at present connected with the foremost school of Domestic Science in this country.

They told Miss Howard they wanted a cook book which would be different from all others, which would be practical, economical, new and useful alike to the young housekeeper, as well as the experienced cook; in a word a Cook Book which every woman would want, no matter how many other Cook Books she had.

No expense was spared and as a result was published this splendid book of 1450 new receipts, profusely illustrated and durably bound. You would be amazed if you knew how many thousand dollars were spent on just authorship and illustrations. It is the equal of any $2.50 Cook Book on the market. The Opportunity Is Yours

WOMAN JIGSAWS CASH FROM PUZZLE PICTURES

M. Isabel Ayer is Also an F. P. E., Degree Obtained in College of Experience.

By SYBIL WARNE.

One woman in Boston has discovered that there is money in jig saw puzzles and that Boston's biggest business men like to puzzle over them as a relief from the strain of their work.

Before that discovery she had found out at times in money in giving first aid to disabled fountain pens. Miss M. Isabel Ayer is the young woman. She signs herself M. Isabel Ayer, F. P. E. The puzzle letters mean 14 and the "92 Expert."

It is not very common in Boston for a young woman to sign her name plus an A. B. W. or a D. D. or a M. D. or a L. L. But there is only one A. P. E. There this Ayer.

M. ISABEL AYER, F. P. E.
QUICKERING PHOTO

Miss Ayer was very successful as fountain pen expert, but is now specializing rich with jigsaw puzzles.

Does it take a college course to get 'fi? Indeed it does. That's where Miss Ayer won it. And she is still going to the same college, taking a post-graduate course. The only one thing about this college is that a girl can go as long as she wants to before she can say tuition fee—as could anyone in the college in the College of Experience, which gives a whole lot of degrees. All you have to do is to pay one's grit and take a course.

Once an O. M. Teacher.

Miss Ayer, who is a business woman in a seething corridor in one of Boston's biggest and busiest buildings, was once an O. M. teacher.

Once she was an old-maid school teacher. But sometime the hyphens got on her fingers. So one day she packed her bag with a couple of hundred dollars worth of fountain pens—bought with all her savings—and started across the U. S. A. She never stopped until she reached the corridor of the big building in Boston.

During that itinerant period appreciation of the learned seniorcrats many things. She learned how to manage over from a nondescript female into a real woman. And when the dollars started coming in from the pen she would return two or three good thick volumes.

Of all the toxic, touchy, peevish, petty, choleric, wasteful things that ever made mortals there is nothing more seething and exasperating than just an ordinary fountain pen—a leaky, dripping, flighty, warped and splintering fountain pen. And the ailments that avoid it! Mumps, measles and whooping cough, typhoid, smallpox and the plague, lumbago, gout and senile decay are as nothing singly or in bunches compared to the spasms and the convulsions and the hemorrhages and the final decrepitude of the average fountain pen.

It is a mere pastime for a young woman with an M. D. after her name to diagnose your human afflictions, rattle out a couple of dozen pills and tinge up a few dizzy doddits and platform remedies and the patient is cured. Maybe. Maybe not. After one every half hour. It is quite easy, also, for you to go home and wait for one to die in your dining.

But when a stubborn pen, suffering from overwork or paralysis or stricture or hemorrhage, or maybe it has only been out on a visit and is brought to M. Isabel Ayer, F. P. E., and is told prone on her operating table afterward, takes more than a few pills and proves to be not a cure—and funerals are not allowed from that seething corridor.

The young woman with F. P. E. after her name gets on her quaint surgical paraphernalia and she gets busy. Surgical lessons, an alcohol lamp, a magnifying glass, a steel rod, a bottle of ink, a few minutes and plenty of caffeine paper. The begin of the operation. Then according to the severity of the ailment. The pen's digestive apparatus is cleaned, its inky substance, its blood vessels—as the patient, maybe, may be—its nerves and where, or perhaps it's only general debility.

Puzzle in Demand.

And how it's cured, adjusted, lubricated, screwed and fitted out with a new set of internal or external apparatus—as needed. And it's sterilized and disinfected and perfected until Mr. Microbe has to hustle to get away with a scrimpy.

But there comes a time during the last business depression, when the pockets of women's pocketing issue about getting their formula pens fixed no longer. So the stem the file and to pay the M. I. Isabel Ayer on to work to jig-saw picture puzzles.

BROOKLINE BARS MOVING PICTURES

Raiso Flanders and Harry Cass, a Brookline business man, were refused permission to open a moving picture house in Brookline by the Selectmen. Petitions against a license for the house were made by the Rev. Michael T. McManus, pastor of St. Mary's Church; the Rev. Seabury Ledyard, John Sherwin of the same church and Dr. H. Carroll Percy of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. A similar petition by a Mr. Quinlan was also denied.

TRY FIVE MEN ON DEATH CHARGE NOV. 13

Dwight Attorney Pelletier has set November 13 as the date for the trial of five men charged with murder in the first degree, the trial will take place in the Suffolk Criminal Court.

Captain Alexander Mortlock Arcompora, Daniel J. Lennon, Joseph Lennon and Dauphine Rosanio. They are accused of killing Antonio Scarpa, who was found to be poisoned for the defendants. A special venire of one hundred jurors will be issued.

STILL GUESSING FOLEY QUESTION

Is Margaret L. Foley, the Suffragist leader, going to ask Lieutenant-Governor Frothingham the question: "Why don't you get married?" Scores of those who have asked Miss Foley to be AMERICAN in its effort to find out what the question is that the Suffragist leader is going to put to the Republican candidate for Governor, believe this to be the one she has in mind.

Only a week remains before Miss Foley will ask the question. Can you guess what it is? If you can you will get $5 from the AMERICAN and the five best answers next received will receive $1 each. Only Miss Foley now knows the question. It is for you to say whether or not Miss Foley will put the question to the Lieutenant-Governor. Address Editor Boston AMERICAN, Boston.

Here are some of the interesting answers so far received:

"Why don't you get married?" M. L. Foley, Faneuil Hall.

Mr. Louis Frothingham, please explain why it is that you do not marry. If it be because you think your wife would try to compel you to vote for the rights cannot you explain it?—J. J. Hastings, No. 62 Beach street, Boston.

If women are capable of holding the positions of mayors, doctors and lawyers, they are capable of fighting in the Civil War, should they be denied the "vote politically"?—Lena Rush, No. 529 Western avenue, Lynn.

Are you in favor of doing away with the women laborers in the foundries?"—J. C. Sperkman, Fairfield, Ct.

"If elected, what will you do to better the conditions of the wage-earning women of the Commonwealth?"—George F. Cunningham, No. 4 Pond street, Salem.

MAN DEAD IN NEW YORK LIVED HERE

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—The body of an elderly man, who died suddenly at Pier 51, North River, foot of Charlton street, is known to-day to be that of Thomas H. Harrington of Boston. The identification was made at the morgue by Walter A. Griffiths, Eastern manager of the advertising firm at No. 290 Fifth avenue. Mr. Harrington's connection with Mr. Griffiths said that he had taken to live after visiting himself and his daughter at their home in West Roxbury, Mass., for several days, had started home for Boston. He was presumably about to board the ship when he was stricken.

The only Thomas H. Harrington in the Boston city directory is a pensioner at No. 866 East Fifth street, South Boston.

REDECORATION IN CRADLE OF LIBERTY

During the next two months Faneuil Hall will be painted and redecorated to such an extent that Peter Faneuil himself wouldn't know the old place. Stagging parties have been a part of the work, will be whitewashed; the floors scraped and the galleries and platform refinished in some substantial color. Despite these arrangements, the Republican rally scheduled for next Monday noon, will be held in the hall.

AVENGERS SLAY BLACK HAND MAN

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 31.—That Francesco Manello, the ex-convict extortioner and Black Hand agent, who was murdered body was found jammed in an empty whisky barrels in a ravine five miles from this city yesterday was killed by avengers of the murder of Attilio, a wealthy Italian, is the theory on which police are working to solve the crime, following the complete identification of Manello's remains.

MELLEN CONDUCTORS MUST AUDIT TRAFFIC

BRANDEIS MAY FIGHT 'STEEL'

Louis D. Brandeis, the Boston lawyer who is known the country over as a champion of the people's rights, is likely to be a powerful factor in the government's suit against the billion-dollar Steel Trust.

Mr. Brandeis would figure most naturally in an action of this nature. He was counsel for the people in the fight for lower freight rates.

During the government prosecution of the Tobacco Trust, Mr. Brandeis also was counsel for the independent tobacco dealers.

Now Mr. Brandeis is hired, according to a dispatch from New York, to assist ex-Secretary of War Dickinson in the prosecution of the Steel combine.

Announcement Expected Soon.

Attorney-General Wickersham is in New York to confer with the public lawyers who composed plan of the Tobacco Trust for dissolution. It is known that, in a few days, the Attorney-General will announce the names of the special attorneys who are to assist ex-Secretary Dickinson in the suit to disintegrate the United States Steel Corporation.

Some of the most able lawyers in the country, experienced in anti-trust proceedings, will be selected for this purpose. It is reported that Mr. Brandeis is to be offered these special positions for the government.

Mr. Brandeis is a shrewd cross-examiner and can extract the truth regarding corporation finances from the most hostile witnesses.

The Attorney-General will not mention any names till he is ready to announce all the special counsel who are to assist Judge Dickinson. Nor will Mr. Brandeis himself say whether or not any tender has been made to him by the Attorney-General.

Quick Action by Committee.

It is announced from Washington that a telegram has been received from Representative Stanley, chairman of the congressional committee investigating the Steel Trust, saying he would return to Washington immediately after the election in Kentucky next week and plan for an early resumption of the committee's work. One of the first subjects Mr. Stanley committee expects to take up will be Elbert H. Gary's relations with transportation companies.

HARVARD PLAYERS FEEL CONFIDENT OF WINNING SATURDAY

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS

INDIANS ARE GETTING READY FOR BATTLE WITH HARVARD TEA

Indians Out for Scalps of Harvard, Penn, and Brown

Very little is being said these days about the Carlisle football team, the opponents of Coach Haughton's Crimson eleven in the Stadium a week from next saturday, yet Coach Glen Warner's team this Fall is perhaps the best ever turned out at the Indian institution.

The Indians have the distinction of having the best scoring team on the gridiron this year. In its seven games this season they have rolled up 212 points, while opposing teams have scored two touchdowns, both of which were made after Warner had put in many substitutes in the lineup.

Carlisle's most notable victories have been over the University of Pittsburg team 17 to 0, Dickinson 17 to 0, and on the fast Lafayette team of Easton, Pa., 19 to 0.

Other victories have been over teams which would correspond to minor college eleven in New England. Muhlenburg College went down to defeat 32 to 0, Lebanon Valley College 53 to 0, Mount St. Mary's College 46 to 5 and Georgetown 28 to 5.

Team Coached to Minute.

The eleven which Coach Warner will bring to Cambridge will be composed of eleven of the speediest and cleverest gridiron men of the year and the thirty thousand spectators who will pack the Stadium to see the tricky Indian eleven will see a team coached to the minute in all the tricky plays of up-to-date football.

In past years Warner, the former Cornell coach, has trusted on the field a well coached eleven with always a trick or two to use on the Crimson. The most famous trick ever played by the Aborigines was several years ago when an Indian back with the ball rushed smack into the interested over the goal line while the Harvard players were seeking everywhere for the ball.

This year Warner has several trick plays up his sleeve which he will spring against the Crimson for it is understood that he is seeking the scalps of three teams this Fall and they are the scalps of Harvard, Pennsylvania and Brown.

This Saturday the team faces Penn and the following week sees them lining up against the Crimson in the Stadium. The next trip East brings the Carlisle eleven to Providence against the Brown team on Thanksgiving Day in the biggest game in the New England States on that day.

Indians Use Onside Kick.

The Indians favorite play this year is the onside kick with Thorpe, the giant veteran halfback, and the fleetest man on the college gridiron this year booting the ball, with the ends, both of whom are exceptionally fast to recover the short kick.

Although rumors are coming from the Indian camp now that the team is badly handicapped on account of injuries to Thorpe, Captain Burd Newcomb, the phenomenal tackle, and Quarterback Arcasa, it is believed that all of these men will be seen in the Penn, Harvard and Brown games in the condition and ready to take the game of their lives.

The rumors say that Thorpe is suffering from bruises received in the Lafayette game and that he will be on crutches for several weeks; that Captain Burd is suffering from a strained back that has caused the slight attack of pneumonia and that the brilliant Arcasa is suffering from many minor injuries which will keep him out of the game for several weeks.

But it is quite customary for Warner to send broadcast reports that his team is in bad shape just before the big game and then on the day has both seeking some opponent's scalp.

Thus the stories that the team is in bad shape should not be taken too seriously.

So far this season the Indians' plays have been the notable and successful ones from regular formations, old style line plunging by Powell, the fullback, and end runs by the drill of Thorpe.

Warner Holding Back Plays.

Warner has not yet uncovered any of the plays which he will use in the Pennsylvania and Harvard games, and it is said that he has so many tricks up his sleeve that in spring on these two teams that he has not yet decided which he will spring first on the Crimson eleven.

The Indians have one asset that very few elevens have this Fall and that is a wonderful punter. Indeed the Indians have the best punter on the gridiron. He frequently gets away punts of seventy-five yards in length and the squads are hard to catch.

In all the games so far this year, Thorpe's kicks have averaged well over fifty yards and the average was kept down to this distance because Thorpe's ends could not cover the kicks well.

Thorpe is a wonderful runner who can cover the hundred in close to ten flat in the open field he is a clever dodger and is a hard tackler when on the defensive.

To show the wonderful speed of the giant Indian back it is well to state that in the Pittsburgh game Thorpe kicked an onside kick which went over the right end's head and traveled a distance of some thirty yards.

Thorpe, quick as a cat, was away as soon as the ball was kicked and with a leap in the air as the ball was about to fall into an opposing player's hands grabbed it out of the air and was off for a tuchdown gain.

Thorpe has perfect control of the ball and can throw the forward pass with accuracy in any direction. The same is true with kicking the onside kick.

Warner is practicing behind closed gates for the Pennsylvania and Harvard games and although he is one who will never predict what his team will accomplish, it is said that he has his warriors coached to the minute and that he expects to hand out a drubbing to Pennsylvania, Harvard and Brown and will be the leading team of the year.

Andover Team in Good Shape.

ANDOVER, Oct. 31—The Andover squad returned from their game with Dartmouth freshmen and reported at Brother Field in the best of condition. The day was given up to signal drill, and special attention was given to the passing of the ball, especially during the line scrimmage. The coaches observed that although there was a marked improvement in the work of the aerial game, Andover is not yet up to the standard of their previous years' offensive and defensive work. Dartmouth has not both the weight and the experience of a championship team, but they showed considerable life this week. With the Exeter game one week away, Saturday, the chances seem to point to the New Hampshire team as the favorite, but the unexpected often prevails. Andover is bound to improve during the interesting time and the final appearance the team representing the Blue has been known to be the best of the season. The Exeter game should be a hard fought contest. After the year's schedule is completed, the coaches will be able to form a more definite opinion as to the merits this week it will be materially in strengthening the team for the big game.

Middies in Secret Practice.

ANNAPOLIS, Oct. 31—Not the slightest token of gloom marked the practice of the Naval Academy football squad this afternoon. The hard battle against Western Reserve Saturday than to secure a victory over the second team in the annual mix-up staged by juniors or fifths were on the field today and they were anxious for the fray. The usual week, be available within a day or two. The practice was held behind closed gates for years being taken to bar the public entirely but the coaches decided that the best way to keep secret any new maneuvers they will send crowded out of about thirty newspaper men who usually attend the practice sessions. After the year the Head Coach Howard said that he was very satisfied.

No Practice for Brown.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 31—The Brown football squad held no practice yesterday, but Coaches Robinson and Pyle will proceed to put the men through a course of training to-day. While the game if the indifference shown around Harvard is still a mystery, Brown will have no excuse for a repetition of it, unless it goes down to defeat in New Haven a week from Saturday. The public interest is rapidly growing and the Brown rooters will have the feels that Harvard will be defeated. Considerable time will be devoted to signal practice from now on to play the game. Bartlett is starting to coach for his shooting this week and will be used in practicing regularly only a week.

Tufts Has Long Drill.

Although many of the Tufts varsity players were excused from practice yesterday on account of the annual scrimmage was omitted, the candidates who were on the field put in a strenuous hour at signal drilling. Coach Tobin kept the line of scrimmage well into the field so that the backfield men could get the feeling of the holes which the Aggies uncovered in Saturday's game.

Secret Practice at Amherst.

AMHERST, Oct. 31—The Amherst team came through Saturday's game with Trinity with most of the second string men were given an opportunity to perform. Captain Darden showed his ability as a ground gainer in the line and was relieved by Dartmouth star, Farnsley. The men are playing hard and fast football and are rounding into form for the Williams game. The practice this week will be behind closed gates, no many new plays will be developed. The Amherst team will leave Monday morning for Williamstown.

Captain Hart and Four Star Tiger Players

Crimson Team Confident of Victory Over Tiger Eleven

By TED PARKE.

The work for the second eleven for the remaining three weeks will probably be [illegible] as hard work as last week, when Brown was [illegible] and a decided one.

While Princeton is just [illegible] as Brown, the Harvard coaches are a little more confident of the [illegible] with the Tigers, and while Princeton has shown really made of first-class stud[illegible] may win on a little easier for a [illegible] on paper have it rectification will [illegible].

With the hard string of games [illegible] hard work, the coaches [illegible] Harvard eleven might be disastrous.

A tough scrimmage for about half [illegible] on the field this afternoon, the varsity lining up against the second team while the subs will also take a whack at the varsity in several scrimmages for a short [illegible].

The men are all in pretty good [illegible], everyone of the eleven with the possible exception of Hart, the halfback running through the Brown rooser in the physical [illegible] and much confidence in their ability.

Hart received a slight muscle bruise during the Brown game, but it is not serious, and a little rest will put him in good [illegible].

Gardner Returns to Game.

Harvard has been minus a little stronger in the quarterback position by the enforced absence of quarterback Gardner yesterday in actual playing. Gardner was laid out in the game with Brown and has been out of the game since that time, his injured knee keeping him quiet.

Yesterday, however, he got into actual form, and showed that he is going to be a big help during the remainder of the season. He was on [illegible] a bit, but this week seemed to be the best that he has been during his [illegible].

The work yesterday was a scrimmage for twenty minutes or more with the varsity and their subs, in which scrimmage however, there was no kicking, many formations simply being run off on a trial.

The idea of the work was apparently to keep the men hardened up than anything else, although a number of the newest formations which have not been exposed to the inspection game of the season's season, were tried out, such games as that with Brown, were given a tryout to keep the men familiar with them.

The work this week will, now that the season is drawn to a close, consist more of offense and a stonewall resistance on the defense, the coaches not being sure of some of the rough spots and perfecting such minor matters and spots in the scheme of the positions he holds.

While Harvard played a strong game against Brown, the fault of perfection has been noticed in the last few games, and there is plenty of room for improvement in every man on the varsity.

Tackles Can Improve in Play.

Tackle for instance can be improved at both sides of the line. Gardner is playing a very fine game at his position, but he is still a little too eager to get through and make the play, and he has not yet developed the play and made certain that [illegible] going where he [illegible] they feel [illegible] the direction.

The result is that frequently the runner manages to slip around him, and he does not get through his position. Don't let this discourage you, Gardner.

There have been no bad gains through the tackle position, the line holding well, covers and follows the play back and this is the one thing which has pleased the coaches, but he must be cured of this defect before the Tiger game, and he should be.

Another spot which can be improved is the right end. Fortune Felton and O'Brien are apt too sure at the end of the line, and there is always a chance that either one of them, whichever happens to be playing, may be thrown out of the play and boxed, with the result that the play will be run around the end for a gain.

Howard, the hammer thrower, who until this season was a star at the end of the position, particularly because of his speed in getting down the field and getting on the plays of his opponents, is out of the game for the season with a bad ankle which he received in practice several weeks ago, and the loss of the work of the two men before mentioned.

Smith needs a little more weight, and if he can put on a few lbs. he is thoroughly familiar with all the little snares and pitfalls which the opposing ends are certain to employ the unwary end, and he has not yet played.

Howard Is Fast and Heavy.

Howard will be very useful, however, as soon as he returns to the game, particularly because of his combined weight and speed, the big chap tipping the scales at over 190 pounds. Weight is very nice for an end to have, for it often prevents him being shoved out of the way by a fast flying interference.

Howard has the list of substitutes and also as a reward of virtue on the football field, and he has been a hard worker and has been taken to the varsity squad. Tolley is also showing up well, but has not yet enough, for he is very fast, heady and against the second team in the second varsity scrimmage he has proved himself a very apt man at getting down and getting his man.

It is not clear why it should be, but there is a dearth of early end on the Harvard varsity squad who can be relied upon at all times to hold on to the ball when the forward pass is being executed. Tolley is clever in this respect, and for that reason he may be used in some of the games coming soon.

It might not be a bad idea for the coaches to give Tolley a little practice in drop-kicking. Up till the last couple of games he did not seem to be able to miss anything in the way of a goal within forty yards.

He has not been doing much kicking in practice of late, however, and the result is that he tries for goals in record games [illegible] he has been missing frequently.

It may be of interest to know that the coaches are [illegible] to permit this man kicking ability in Potter was something [illegible] recorded, although he has given evidence of having the making of an extraordinary performer about [illegible] he was treated as much as possible.

Potter Will Get More Work.

With the return of Gardner to the game, however, and the consequent re-inforcement of the ranks of the quarterback, Potter will probably get a little more work to do [illegible] this respect.

[illegible] was not given any work yesterday, except a little period of grass for he worked pretty hard last week, and as the game with Princeton is two weeks off, he has time to keep that week, until the game with the Tigers.

A hard game with Saturday [illegible] Brown, and the result is [illegible] from going too fine. The [illegible] are expecting a hard game [illegible] carefully.

[illegible] a couple of rain-[illegible] them. In view of this [illegible] a rain time for [illegible] Princeton at Princeton, [illegible] and the curfew will not [illegible] raining rules such as [illegible] will be in force, but [illegible] to be entered and [illegible] Saturday [illegible] Brookline when [illegible] they come to [illegible] on the 11th of November.

Williams Team Gets Rest.

WILLIAMSTOWN, [illegible] Williams Varsity was given a [illegible] ly engaging [illegible] Amherst team. The squad later assembled [illegible] Field, where [illegible] the second and third elevens [illegible] Captain [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] to

BILLY PAPKE AND MOHA CLASH TO-NIGHT IN ARMORY BOUT

Silk Hat Harry's Divorce Suit

By Tad

SILK HAT HARRY'S DIVORCE SUIT IS THE TALK OF NEW ENGLAND. IT APPEARS REGULARLY IN THE SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Billy Papke and Bob Moha In Big Battle at Armory

By JACK CONWAY.

The eyes of the boxing world will be focused on Boston to-night when Billy Papke and Bob Moha clash at the Armory A. A. in a twelve round bout. It is the biggest fight which has been pulled off in this town for many months.

Papke has been eliminating the middleweight championship since Stanley Ketchell was shot dead. But his showing in the ring during the past year has caused followers of the sawdust circle to consider his title somewhat as a joke. It is true that the Kewanee hiker has done some great work but he has also made several miserable showings, the most notable of which was against Sailor Burke in New York.

Papke says that he is in the best of condition for his mill with Moha. He probably realizes as well as anybody else that his entire future hinges on his showing to-night. If Papke is defeated he will be forced to seek another occupation. His days as a ring attraction will be over. Billy is now in the "mixed" class in fighting and out on the road. There he cannot very well afford to go down to defeat before the Milwaukee dweller.

After his bout with Sailor Burke Papke went to his farm in Kewanee, Ill., where he started to get himself in shape. He trained with John Wilde, the hard-hitting Chicago heavyweight, who is now in town. People who saw Papke in his training stints say that he is now right as ever and that he will give Moha a hot surprise.

Papke a Sensational Fighter.

When right, Papke is one of the most sensational fighters in the ring. He doesn't know the art of clever scientific sparring and footwork, but when it comes to hitting he is there in his element. There are few boxers in the ring who pack such a lusty wallop as Papke.

When Billy was training for his scrap with Jim Sullivan, the English middleweight champion, the boxing writers on the other side of the big pond were not at all backing the latter to defeat Sullivan and would experience little difficulty in defending the world's championship intact. But once the gong clanged it was a different story altogether. Sullivan bowled Sullivan around the ring like a wounded fly and finally sent the Hoosier down for the count.

Moha has been training in the Tremont street club for the past few days and is in the pink of condition. A "fighting Bob" realizes that if he can defeat Papke he will be in line for more big matches. And as a result he will do his level best to bring home the bacon. He is a wonderful hitter and a great boxer. The Milwaukee star has never been knocked off his feet since he first appeared in the ring. Papke rules a slight favorite.

Freddy Duffy for Jamaica Plain will meet Gilbert Gallant of Chelsea in the semi-final bout of eight rounds. In the preliminaries Frankie O'Connor of Boston will swap wallops with Steve Kennedy of Lawrence, while Young Keane will try and slip a K. O. punch over on Ed Bennett.

Andy Morris, the iron man of the heavyweight division, will continue his whirlwind campaign down the line when he clashes with Jim Stewart at Brooklyn tonight. The Nobbie Islander has been ringside in about three bouts a week lately and is winning the majority of them in record-breaking time. Andy is a typical rusher and doesn't know the meaning of the word quit. Morris' next bout after that will develop quicker by lighting two or three times a week. Andy is a typical Morris will display his wares at New Bedford, where he is credited to meet Jack Willie, the Chicago heavyweight. Any time you are looking to get action nothing is do with night shows, don't overlook Andy Morris. For, take it from me, he is president of this week's organization, or at least he ought to be.

Sam Langford will probably engage in a ten-round battle with Sim McVey in Sydney Australia on Christmas Day. The Big Bluck will arrive at Sidney about December 1, and men of the Langford type usually like to get acclimated before getting down to business. Before meeting Langford McVey will meet Jack Clancy, while Lester, the American "hope," who recently went Jack Dillon down for the count, is now lying to clean last champion in two rounds, is about three days champion went into another field of labor.

Mr. Michael Sullivan, famed citizen of Cambridge, have you got your right hand sharpened. If not, get busy and do so, and then look real angry, for Hugo Hagen is on your trail. Now, Hayward is from Brockton and challenges any welter-weight in the world to meet him in a game of golf. Hayward says that he is going after Mike Twin Sullivan, Kid Herne or any of those fellows claiming the welterweight title. And, by the way, Briggs says that he was not defeated at Marlboro the other night. He adds that he never fought at that club, and never will.

Promoters in every section of the country are now trying to get Matty Baldwin, the strong little Canadian "heavyweight," to fight at their club. Billy Gibson of the Fairmont A. C. has now signed McLeod, a protege to meet Packey McFarland. McLean will pit Matty next the Windy City favorite if the latter makes weight. Baldwin is one of the few lightweights in the country who never experiences any difficulty in making the lightweight limit of 133 pounds. Matty has been going at a good clip lately and would be sure and give Packey a great battle.

Johnny Coulon has started training for coming bouts. The clever Chicago bantamweight is now under the management of Emily Thiry, who is also chief caretaker of Packey McFarland. Coulon is one of the greatest little men in the world and can easily make as low as 113 pounds. If Coulon is looking for a match he can get two bout bows only too willing to meet him. The almost unbeatable Kid Herne and young gentlemen are known under the names of Jimmy Walsh and Al Delmont.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

CALL AND EXPLAIN

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and have been keeping company with a girl about the same age for the last three months. She asked me to come up to her house for the last three Sunday nights, but I have been taking my family around in a machine, and could not get out. She did mad. I called her up and asked her if I could come Monday or Wednesday, and she said she had to go to church both nights. Kindly advise how to win her love again, for I love her dearly. J. S., Jr.

YOUR absence the first Sunday night should have been immediately explained. As it is, you owe her an apology, call on her and justify yourself and impress on her mind more clearly just how matters stand. In order to regain her confidence, be sure in the future you can keep a promise before making it.

DON'T BE SWAYED BY GOSSIP

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have known a young man for the past year and during that time he has told me he cared for me. A girl friend told me he is a great card player. I asked him about it, and he said he was not. Should I give up this man? I have never known him to tell an untruth. S. J. E.

THIS looks like jealousy on the part of the other girl. You should have no right to doubt the young man until he gives you cause.

Put it out of your head and provoke yourself and him ...ver again to believe such idle gossips.

"WAIT TILL YOU ARE GROWN

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man of sixteen, and there have been keeping company with a young lady two years my junior. My father objects, as he says I am too young to keep company. I have tried to stop going out with her, but it seems all in vain.

YOUR father is right. You are too young to form any serious attachment, and if you continue in this way it means unhappiness for both. Try some occupation that especially interests you and forget her. Explain to her that you cannot possibly think of marriage at your age. As an engagement is impossible, you will be wise to give her up.

ASK FOR AN INTERVIEW

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Five years ago I knew a girl. We were both sixteen. She asked me to call. I went but once. Lately we had an encounter, and we have not spoken to each other since. When she left she would not shake hands with me and I think she must have seen or heard of me. How can I regain her love? Should I write, asking if she ever thinks of me?

WRITE by all means, asking if you may call and renew your friendship. Tell her how glad you were to see her again, and that you hoped you had done nothing to offend her. Tell her if she will allow you to speak to her personally you are certain you can come to a right understanding.

TRY INDIFFERENCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

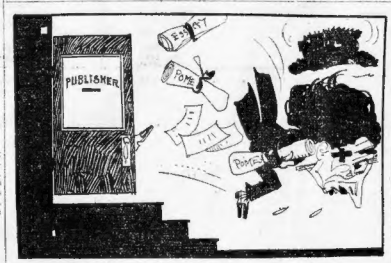
I am a girl of sixteen and I know a boy of eighteen. He would like to be came to see me. Now I would like to continue this friendship, but he does not write any more. What shall I do?

INDIFFERENCE.

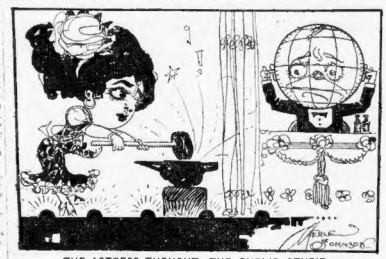
IF he does not write, I am afraid the friendship has come to an end. Let him be the first to renew the correspondence. He called on you and he will undoubtedly call again, but in the meantime you can do nothing, and I would advise you to waste no more time and thought on some one so indifferent to you. A girl loses her dignity going after nothing in pursuing a man. He must come voluntarily, and indifference on your part will do much to bring him.

A Talk With the Unsuccessful

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX



THE WAIL OF THE UNSUCCESSFUL AUTHOR.



THE ACTRESS THOUGHT THE PUBLIC STUPID.

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner.

HOWEVER you may have striven for success and failed to achieve it, and however worthy of later fortune you feel yourself, do not waste time yen brooding over it. Do not waste your remaining vitality in bitter meditations on the injustice of fate in bestowing its favors upon the less deserving.

No one ever climbed to success by self-frustration of those above him.

As ambitious novice actresses who had never obtained anything better than a maid's part in a play, despite her possession of beauty, voice and dramatic qualities of personality, sat and discussed the stupidity of the public and the degeneracy of good taste as exhibited in the vogue of certain theatrical favorites of the day.

After she had hauled most of the "artificial stars" from their firmament of glory, and shown that their glitter was only made of tinsel, I begged her to desist. "You will never become a moon or a sun," I said, "by giving your vitality to such thoughts as these.

"Let the public applaud whom and when it will. Let the calcium light fall where it may; there is some cause for it all. Conserve your forces for attaining the success you believe you merit. Every letter, resentful impulse indulged in is a step away from your goal.

"Do not talk about your desire to lift the ideals of the public to a higher standard of art until you have lifted your own mind and heart to a higher standard than acrimonious criticism. Cease to concern yourself with the poor acting of others, and concentrate upon the determination to get well your own part and to find your rightful place upon the stage.

"Make yourself over, mentally, before you attempt to make over public taste."

Young authors, and those not so young, tell me frequently how very bad is the literature accepted by the magazines, and how very good is their own rejected material.

They rail at editors, publishers and people.

The same counsel applies to all aspirants in the line of art, or indeed in any vocation in life.

Waste no breath or brain-power upon the demerits of the successful.

What is worthless will not long endure.

Whatever is masquerading in false colors will in time betray itself in its own base.

The pretender in the court of art will be exposed by Detective Time. Only real things last.

Keep this truth close to your heart and be real yourself.

Observe the fictitious only to avoid its methods.

Do not exhaust yourself running about and crying to the world that what it applauds is not real. Save your strength for sowing them something better to applaud.

Cease comparing yourself, even mentally, to others for the purpose of their disparagement.

If you have real talent, or real power, in any line, and if you build up your nature to be worthy of that endowment, and work along patiently toward your aim, nothing and no one on earth can hinder you from reaching it.

This is the work given you to do, and the pulling down of others who seem in your estimation to have been exalted undeservedly.

Attend to your own life, be worth of success, and you will not need to argue or conquer in order to convince people of your worthiness.

I hold it the duty of one who is gifted

And royally dowered in all men's sight,

To know no rest till his life is lifted

Wholly up to his great gifts' height.

Great gifts should be worn like a crown of brilliance.

And not like gems on a beggar's hand.

And the toil is constant and unceasing

That lifts up the King to the crown's demand.

HICTANER

The Man That Lived in the Water—One of the Strangest Stories Ever Written

By Jean de la Hire

SEVERAC did not notice her, but all absorbed in his wicked interest, he threw her body upon his shoulder, and leaving the apartment he followed the passage and closed behind him the door which opened on the staircase.

A moment later he was in his own room. Placing Moiselte on the bed he muttered:

"Now, she is mine forever! But no delays! They must have heard me."

"Four o'clock! There is time!"

Leaving the still unconscious young girl alone, Severac sprang toward the stairway. He went down four steps and lost himself in the darkness of a gallery where no electric light was burning.

Meanwhile a more extraordinary scene and of even graver import was going on in the laboratory.

Upon leaving Moiselte, Hictaner had plunged into the sea and gone straight toward the submarine grotto in front of it, the water-filled cells ordinarily inhabited by the man-fish.

Hardly had he passed the gate when he found himself in the presence of the heathen priest, who was overjoyed at seeing him once more.

"My son, here you are at last! How anxious we have been about you!"

"My father," responded Hictaner, "will you please follow me?"

Without another word the young man swam rapidly toward the opening from the grotto into the well leading to the laboratory.

Hictaner evidently was not familiar with the underground chambers of the Lost Isle. Many times, however, he had observed the movements of Fulbert and Oxus as they left the submarine grotto. He knew the laboratory from having seen it through the crystal windows of the aquarium.

Went Straight to Well

From the directions given by Moiselte, Hictaner had easily guessed that Oxus and Fulbert must ascend by a well or stairway after leaving the grotto.

To Fulbert's amusement, the young man went straight to the opening pressed on the rock and the door opened.

Astounded, but maintaining his composure, the priest followed Hictaner.

The well was lighted. The door of the bottom closed automatically, and automatically also the trap door above opened in a fraction of a minute Hictaner had made the ascent.

Fulbert followed less rapidly because in order to go up he was obliged to cling to iron bars planted in the rock like the rungs of a ladder.

When at last the priest set foot upon the concrete floor of the laboratory he saw Hictaner standing silent and severe before Oxus.

The savant was leaning back against a pillar, aghast.

"Oxus!" commanded Fulbert in a terrible tone, "Oxus, disrobe me, quickly, disrobe me!"

His sharp order brought the savant back to life. With all the skill of hands used to manipulating delicate objects and dangerous materials, Oxus made quick work of removing Fulbert's cumbersome diving costume.

With a smile almost of scorn, Hictaner gazed at the two men whom until now he had regarded as gods.

"What does this mean?" stammered Oxus, when the monk was himself once more. "What does this mean?"

"Speak Catalan," said Fulbert in that idiom which was unknown to their pupil.

"We Are Betrayed."

"Something I do not understand has come to pass. We must discover what it means immediately. Is the electric battery ready?"

"Yes."

"Does he know?" gasped the monk, with a swift glance at Hictaner.

"I will tell him, you mean?" murmured Oxus.

"Yes, if necessary."

"What, my creation, our joy, our hope?"

"He has proved to be our undoing, Oxus!"

"Would he be standing there looking at us like this if something had not come to pass which showed him how we have cheated him? Look at him. Judge by his bearing. He despises us, and before long he will hate us mortally."

"Yes, yes. We are betrayed."

"We must know what has happened. What he has found out, and how, and what he wants. And then, Then, if he does not obey us as before, we must kill him. Yes; kill him and construct another Hictaner.

"Ah, all our great plans, all our ambitions, all our hopes! Overturned and destroyed in an hour. And why? Why?

"But we are talking too much. Oxus, we must know. Perhaps the surprise of seeing Hictaner come straight here has made me exaggerate our danger.

"Are you wearing your insulated shoes?"

"Yes."

Same Scornful Smile

"I have mine on, too. He has nothing. On the contrary, wherever he turns his skin must touch the copper plates in the concrete floor. Take your place beside the electric battery and turn on the full current when I give the order. He will be killed. Go, listen don't talk! And if it is necessary, Oxus, obey, obey! Our lives are at stake."

"I will go, Fulbert, and I will obey," said Oxus earnestly.

During this passionate dialogue Hictaner stood, near the still open trap-door motionless, with his eyes fixed on the two diabolical accomplices, and with the same scornful smile playing around the corners of his mouth.

When Oxus turned from Fulbert and went to the further end of the laboratory toward a machine whose brasses were gleaming brightly, the man-fish followed him with his eyes. When the savant was standing beside it, with his hand upon the lever, Hictaner quietly turned his gaze toward the monk.

The child, become a man only a few short hours before, did not know that at a sign from the priest the lever would be pushed downward, and that a deadly electric current would flow through the little copper plates sunk in the concrete floor, and that Hictaner himself, the young lover, filled with life and vigor, animated by noble resolutions and generous projects, would be struck down in a quarter of a second!

(To be continued to-morrow.)

"Hictaner" is running serially in the daily and Sunday AMERICAN. A liberal instalment of this remarkable mystery novel will be printed in Sunday's AMERICAN.

Too Much Risk

IT really was a case in which everything seemed perfect. The insurance company's doctor had reported quite enthusiastically, and the man was not engaged in any dangerous trade.

"I lead a sedentary life," he told them. "I work in an office, and we have no danger of excitement."

"How about sports?" asked the examiner. "Do you play football—hockey? Do you box? Belong to an athletic club?"

"No; none of those things. I think you'll find I'm a safe risk."

"Do you scorch?"

"What do you mean?"

"Do you drive your car faster than the speed limit?"

"I have no car."

"No—no car?" gasped the official. "But how do you get about?"

"I walk," explained the reckless one, beginning to get nervous.

"Sorry!" sighed the insurance man. "We can't take you! A scorcher is pretty risky, but a man who walks! Great Scott! He hasn't the ghost of a chance!"

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

The Daughter of the House on the Unobserving Men.

WHEN Lysander John Appleton, Jr., combed and dressed and dragged out by the heels to a social affair in the evening, his daughter, Daysey Mayme, knows that if she bombards him with questions, assails him with suggestions, and torments him with hints she will never get out of him any knowledge of what he did, or saw, or heard while there.

As for her mother, well, she's different. Before her daughter has had a chance to use the question mark, her mother has told all.

"My father," said Daysey Mayme in one of those outbursts of attack on the men in which women so very, very rarely indulge, "attended a banquet one night that lasted from 10 till 2. There was a menu half a yard long, and speeches by dignitaries that were two yards long. And when he got home all I could get out of him was 'Pretty good.' He doesn't know if he had oysters or sawdust, wine or cold tea, who sat on either side of him, nor a thing that was said.

"The next day my mother attended a reception. She walked in the parlor door, pushed her way rapidly to the dining room and pushed her way out again, accomplishing her entrance and exit in a minimum of time, as befits one of her bargain-counter experience. She wasn't in the house ten minutes, and that was three months ago, and she is still telling of what she heard and saw.

"She noticed the new Madonna on the wall; found they are making a collection of Madonnas, having tired of teapots; she described how Mrs. A.'s new skirt was trimmed, told how many ornaments Miss B. wore in her hair, that Mrs. C. had trimmed her gray silk with lace to hide the tear, that one corner of the parlor carpet was much eaten, that the lees were pale green, and there were seven kinds of cake, who made them, and just what was in the filling, and the lamp shades were homemade and those in the parlor were darker than those in the library, and the pillow shams were ironed on the wrong side.

"That's the difference between men and women. Men go through life absorbed in looking inward. They have every grievance and ache inside of them defined and catalogued. A woman is looking outward. She is feeding her brain and acquiring information while a man is wondering if it isn't time to go home."

Boil twenty minutes, drain and chop not too fine. Melt two tablespoons butter, rub into it one heaping teaspoon flour, a dash of pepper and four gratings of nutmeg. Return to the fire and cook up five minutes. Serve on a flat dish with slices of cold hard boiled eggs as decorations.

Swift & Company's sales of fresh beef in Boston for the week ending Saturday, Oct. 28th, averaged 8.84 cents per pound.

Day's Best Story

"Are you still taking a cold plunge every morning?"

"No; I stopped doing that to save time."

"Why, a cold plunge doesn't take more than a minute or two."

"I know, but I used to spend three-quarters of an hour curled up in bed hesitating."

A Beautiful Complexion for Every Woman

Nine out of every ten cases of bad complexion are due to ignorance or neglect. To neglect the skin is sure death to the finest complexion. The skin is composed of two layers, top outer layer or epidermis, and the lower or true skin. The top outer layer consists of little scales laid one above the other, which works off from time to time. This layer is full of little holes, called pores. These pores are the outlet of perspiration, oil and other waste matters, which, mixed with dirt and dust, soon closes up the pores.

Look in your mirror, notice the little black specks in the pores of your nose and chin. They were not intended to catch the dirt and dust.

Every woman's toilet table should contain at least two articles. One to keep the pores open and one to prevent them from ever getting closed.

We manufacture two harmless, useful creams, called Plexo Greaseless Cleansing Cream and Plexo Greaseless Cream.

Plexo Creams not only cleanse and perfect the skin, but they also have a wonderful tonic effect, helping, strengthening and invigorating the skin by stimulating the skin to their natural healthy action.

PART ONE—(Continued)

THE woman was not asleep, and he knew she was not asleep as she did not start to scream as Martindale entered. She was sitting crouched up, native fashion, against the wooden wall. She glanced at him with sullen, furtive eyes out of the tangle of her rough fuzz hair, like an ensnared dog that suspects hostility in the gamekeeper.

She still wore the gayly colored cotton print in which Kitty had seen her, but there was still the pitiful bit of colored ribbon twisted into the woolly plait that circled her head, but the cotton shawl was torn and stained, and the hair matted up with clay. Martindale, knowing what he knew, could hardly trust himself to look at the woman crushed there in a couple in the wall by the collar set upon his neck.

She belonged to a northern tribe, a fierce, proud tribe of warriors; the indignity of slavery was worse than death, and Martindale knew that her child had been killed before her eyes. Even Martindale, to whom those black faces were but a mask that hid all expression of joy or sorrow or suffering, could not be blind to the smoldering hatred that burned in the dark, suspicious eyes.

He repented the idea that Gomez he had used last night.

Sees Helpless Slave

"I have come to set you free. It is only know what he had expected from this woman, who had never cried out under her own sufferings, whose long-drawn screams at the torture of her son had been stifled and inwardly rather than deliberately of fear; but he had not expected the absolute silence with which she heard his announcement.

Perhaps she had not heard it; she crouched there still and motionless, like sex-hunting lust for the fire of hatred and suspicion in her sullen eyes.

He went toward her, fumbling with the keys as the hands he had caught up from Gomez's table; it was a full five minutes before he had found the key he sought and fixed it in the lock of the other, and in all that time the woman did not speak nor move. Even when the collar fell from her neck she still sat huddled up.

"Get up," he said. He spoke in English, but the gesture and the tone were understandable. She rose slowly and stiffly, moving like an automatic figure.

"See here, Mr. Saxe. What is this you are doing? It is a piece of madness, I say!"

Gomez's voice close behind him aroused in shrill anger startled Martindale. He glanced round at the half-caste and saw his evil face suffused by passion.

"What are you doing?" Gomez cried again. He did not speak in Spanish now, but in English, which he spoke with the peculiar intonation of the native, or of one accustomed for a long time to translating his thoughts into the dull freedom of the native languages.

Fell Full Length

"Do you want to ruin us—you and me?" he cried. "This woman—she must not be allowed to talk." He broke out into a sudden, horrid cursing. "I wish I had killed the brute that night she tried to murder me. This is what comes of being a soft-hearted fool."

He made a daring forward movement, as though he would have struck the woman who stood motionless before them, like the ghostly wreck of the woman Kitty had seen who had approached to compliness.

A wave of anger swept up over Martindale; he turned and, with a hasty movement, pushed the half-caste back. Gomez, half taken by surprise, reeled and fell sprawling full length among the filth that littered the floor.

At the sight of his fall the woman uttered her first sound of life. She laughed, and her laughter was soft and guttural, like the crooning of a child.

The half-caste was on his feet in a moment; the woman's laughter seemed to have transformed him into something scarcely human. He screamed at Martindale, shaking his fist at him, his face flushed no longer, but white as plaster in his fury.

"You—!"

"You and your wife—to strike me. This for a second time—but not for a third time, you Saxe!"

He was quite filthy and stumbled; at last right in the moment of his supreme contempt, so now in the moment of his anger, the European appeared beneath the native, and he spoke as a coast boy might have spoken.

"For the third time I tell it to you, I, Marco Gomez, who strikes!" he cried.

Martindale looked at him as a master might look down at some insignificant little cur-dog or terrier that yapped at his heels.

"Go back to your bungalow and wait for me there, Gomez," he said: "I'll attend to you presently."

He turned back from Gomez to speak to the woman; but she was gone. She had slipped out like a shadow behind them. She had disappeared like a shadow when she went out into the compound to follow her.

The Girl Slave Vanishes

And, moreover, no one had seen her. He questioned the porters and the sweepers hanging about the house; he questioned the native guard and received from all the same answer. No one had passed that way—no fugitive, no fleeing woman.

Martindale was conscious of a sense of curiously desolating disappointment rising above even the dislike of the scene that must inevitably take place between him and the overseer. His anger lagged as he walked back to the bungalow. In the long-low behind the sulky half-caste who hurried on, disconsolate and hang-dog looking in his soiled white drill. He felt not the malice, or restitution, in this place of slavery seemed to have miscarried. He had shown mercy and had been received with sullen suspicion. There was suspicion in the eyes of every native that he had questioned. Suspicion, and something stronger than suspicion, had he had the power to penetrate to the real feelings hidden behind those black masks. Words from a half-frightened native had dashed to his mind: "Great is the justice of the white man; but greater is the power of a lie."

He sensed a disquieting text upon which to begin the discourse that must presently be delivered in the bungalow before him.

John Kitty turned out from the wood belt that united the native village, and struck on to the path that led toward his own home.

He had finished with Gomez and his present. The man knew now that the end had come. He had left the half-caste breathing out threatenings and execrations against reputation and life itself, but he did not fear his vengeance. Gomez was a poor villain, a craven at heart, but, apart from a dim interest, he could not control his tongue.

Indeed, the thought of Gomez had already become remote before he had emerged from the wood into the glare of the sun, already, even at this early morning hour, hunting down insistently on neck and back.

It was a far worse thing that lay before him—the interview with Kitty.

It would not have been an easy thing this going back—even under ordinary circumstances; he had betrayed like a cad and a brute; he had insulted her before their guests; he had struck her on the mouth. But now, in the face of the change that had come upon him as he knelt to find fallen idol in the wood, it was immensely more difficult.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

An Evening at Diners' Club. The Divorce Question is Discussed.

"LADIES' cloak room second floor," announced the bell boy. "Elevator to the right."

"I'll wait for you here," said Warren. "Now hurry up!" as Helen entered the elevator. "Don't stay up there primping—we're late now!"

Upstairs the maid checked her wraps, but Helen could not get near the mirror. A half dozen women were crowding about it, applying powder and rouge. So quickly fluffing up her hair by the aid of the tiny glass in her purse, she hurried down.

Warren led the way through the hotel corridor to the private room where the club was giving its monthly dinner.

The place was in a buzz of confusion. A few were already seated, but many more were crowding around the tables trying to find their names on the slip of paper at each plate.

"Here we are!" announced Warren, locating his own name at two of the places. "Not bad seats. That's the speakers' table over there. We can hear all right—if there's anything worth hearing."

"Oh, I doubt if I'll know anyone here. That was a nice trick of Stevens's—inveigling us into this thing and then not coming himself."

"But, Warren, he couldn't help that. He couldn't come if Mrs. Stevens is ill."

"Well, I suppose not. But if it turns out to be a bore, if there's a lot of long winded speakers that say nothing—he'll hear about it all right! I told him I couldn't stand these club dinners, yet nothing would do but that we must come."

"But, dear, it may be interesting. Louise Miller Parks is to talk on 'Divorce'—and I've always wanted to see her."

Warren shrugged his shoulders. "These strong-minded literary women gallivanting around as speakers at public dinners—they'd much better be home darning their husbands' socks!"

"But she isn't married—is she?"

"Then that's why she's talking on divorce. It's the woman no man wants for a wife that goes around putting fool ideas into the heads of other women."

Warren Is Irritable.

Here a small gray-haired man took the seat beside Helen. A stout and much overdressed woman was with him—evidently Dr. Hilton and his wife.

"I like to know when we're not anything to eat here," complained Warren, glancing at his watch. "The cards say seven-thirty—it's after half past now."

"But I suppose it IS difficult to get anything like this started on time. Oh, do you think THAT is Louise Miller Parks?" asked Helen eagerly, as a woman about forty-five in a gleaming blue satin gown took her seat at the speakers' table.

Warren grunted. "She's ugly enough to be anybody. It takes a women like that to start ideas like a divorce law."

"Oh, dear, don't be unkind," pleaded Helen, hoping no one had heard him and resenting deeply his words. "I'm sure the dinner, which she knew would improve his mood.

Here a worried looking waiter dashed up with the first course—four very small dish-enlarged looking clams on a dish of not overclean crinkled lace.

Warren smiled contemptuously. "From clams! George, they're cutting it close! And look at the size of 'em! He's trying to fill a whale. "We want a wine card!"

The waiter handed him one from another table and rushed off again.

"Now, what do you want to drink?" Got to have something to get through a dinner like this. Keep you from being bored to death. Um!" running his finger down the wine list. "How about sauterne?"

Then, without waiting for any reply, he again beckoned the waiter.

"A quart of this No. 228. And bring it NOW—not when the dinner's half over." By this time every one was seated and all the tables were filled. With keen interest Helen glanced around. It was quite by a literary crowd, and most of the women were badly dressed. A straining after the unusual and the striking was everywhere.

At the next table sat a tall, thin black-eyed woman, her black hair parted and drawn low over her forehead, long jet pendants hung from her ears, and a black and gold spangled shawl glittered over her shoulders.

At the same table was a woman who looked as though she had been dressed out of the draperies of a cozy corner. Another woman, with reddish hair, worn low on her neck, affected a flowing Greek style of gown, which Helen felt sure was made of white silk shawls, for she had seen at home with the same knotted fringe. And next to her was a long-haired, frowsy looking man, with badly fitting evening clothes and dirty finger nails. Plainly an artist or poet.

When the cheese and coffee had been served, a fifteen-minute intermission before the speeches was announced. Instantly there was a hum and buzz, as every one rose and strolled around. Some one slapped Warren on the shoulder.

"Hello, Jack Curtis, old man! What're you doing here?"

It was Mr. Watson, of whom Helen had often heard. Warren introduced her briefly and then she was left to stand awkwardly by while they laughed and talked together. It was one of the things Helen found hardest to forgive. So often when they were out in public Warren would meet some man to whom he would talk at length, ignoring her utterly, while she would have to stand by trying not to seem painfully ill at ease and self-conscious.

The Speeches Begin.

She was glad now when there was a loud rap for order. All hurried back to their seats and the toast-master was introduced.

He began with some facetious remarks and then the inevitable "This reminds me of a story," followed by the stereotype old vintage brand, which brought forth the usual forced laugh.

Then, with much laudation, he introduced the speaker of the evening, "George Elton Avery, author and playwright."

Mr. Avery rose impressively, pushed back his chair and pulled down his white waistcoat. After a silence to give time for the applause to die out and to increase the effectiveness of his opening, he began his carefully prepared and memorized address on "The Drama and Its Influence on Modern Divorce." The address was very wordy and "sounded well," but was wholly barren of ideas.

He was loudly applauded, and then the toastmaster presented "Louise Miller Parks." She rose, bowing graciously and affecting a certain girlish coyness which suited the girlish blue gown better than it suited the heavy lines of her face, that the powder and rouge seemed only to emphasize.

"Why should there be so much talk and advice on 'How to Hold the Husband'?" she demanded at the outset of the course of her speech. "Is it necessary to hold about anything that is worth while? Does one have to make some effort to hold our papers? Or to make home attractive for the husband, how to keep him from wandering. But how about the wife who doesn't? Why does she need to be held? Should not the holdings of the husband be so much considered as the wife's?

"Uh!" grunted Warren. "Any man that had her would be a fool to let her get away. Much time trying to hold such a woman!"

She said that Helen was

What Would Be Your Three Wishes?

Some of the Best Replies by the American's Readers

"MAN, if you could have your heart's desire, what would you ask for?"

Woman, what would you petition the good fairy to grant you?

Among the interesting letters that have been received in reply to this question is the following beautiful aphorism from William T. Coyle, who has no selfish wish, but only asks for the greatest blessing that could come to humanity:

"Jesus said: 'Peace on earth, good will to men.' Behold! a new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another.'

"A short time ago you required your readers to express their wishes of things which they desired most.

"I have but one. I wish we were living in a world of Brotherly Love.

"Compared with Brotherly Love, all other things fade into petty insignificance. It is the climax of humanity's endeavors. From that center, glowth, with the color, that flows of Universal Knowledge, each tract and tribulation of this topsy-turvy world would receive its proper balm.

"What is Wealth, Beauty or Power when there is such a possibility as Brotherly Love?

"Wealth is the result of degenerating Avarice and Envy. It is the cursed blot on humanity which has been the cause of countless conflicts. It causes son to break with father; daughter to spurn mother; husband to see away, wife, and brother to battle brother. Murders, suicides, retrieve and famine live at its feet. Just for gain has been man's yoke since the dawn of thought, and awaits the coming of an enlightened generation to break it.

"What is Beauty? 'Tis a pedestal, on which unbeliefs stand unfeeling Conceit, Disdain, Selfishness and False Pride. Beauty also awaits an intelligent people to hurl them. She nothings from their false position and spread rule beauty evenly over the world in mind as well as body.

"What Power? It is a throne on which are set Ignorance, Cruelty, War, Slavery, Oh! Enlightened posterity, speed on! Dispel the darkness! Banish it from the Earth forever! Industry is Power. Make industry common as air.

"Whoever saw Wealth with a warm heart for Poverty? Was Beauty ever seen in close embrace with Ugliness? Was Power ever discovered trod-in-fets with a slave?

"The world wanted to be united when Jesus Christ came. Brotherly possession of an individual group of individuals. The but the dream of universal brotherhood. Those dreams have been dreamed before, and humanity suffered disappointment.

"The paths of such individualities are constantly beset with Envy, Hostility, Ignorance, Immorality, Greed and Deceit. Such brigands can never be annihilated on such byways. When they are crushed in one place, they spring up in another. Are, sometimes, they may even be discovered in the dregs of society.

"The highways of Universal Happiness and Contentment must be made broad and smooth and free from strife. Only through the divine teaching of Brotherly Love can such conditions be possible.

"Through Brotherly Love, what a world this might be! I can close my eyes and bring a beautiful picture into my mind. What happiness! What Contentment! A rational system of Life at last! There can be seen no poverty or riches. And a master hand can find no place for Murder, Suicide, Crime or Avarice.

"In a world of Brotherly Love such things could not exist. Industry would be common to all, removing the last residue of unequal riches and destitution. Thus, the incentive to Crime and Avarice would be dead. Only then would the world be forgotten in our barbaric past. Universal Love displaces Murder; and surely nobody would care to leave such a life voluntarily.

"The bread and loved coal of Brotherhood and Knowledge leads to the gates of Happiness and Contentment. That is Brotherly Love."

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

November dividend and interest disbursements in Boston are estimated by the News Bureau at $6,094,407 compared with $31,953,100 in October and $5,757,549 last November.

$ $ $

Frank A. Ruggles figures total dividend payments in Boston next month as $6,151,877, against $5,674,230 six months ago and $5,757,500 a year ago.

$ $ $

Miller & Co. issue an excellent treatise on coffee in circular form, giving a review, a criticism and a forecast.

$ $ $

Boston & Maine gross earnings for September were $1,726,224, an increase of $12,005 over last year. Increased operating costs of $13,543 left the net corresponding to some $705,505, a decrease of $4,867 from last year.

$ $ $

Investment bankers and bankers believe the offer of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Steel Corporation by the government will prove a useful influence in the money market. Because it will divert the investment of surplus funds into other channels. While the antagonistic attitude of the government toward the industrial corporations is causing timidity on the part of some, many are investing money to-day in securities recognized to the government's attacks and are buying Steel on the strength of its bonds, which are the best medium of investment with regard to principal and interest probably is desired.

$ $ $

Institutions are beginning to realize that equipment trust certificates are among the safest and most advantageous forms of investment, and trust companies now prefer to make money in these securities than ever before. Some trust companies have even gone so far as to specify that they shall be purchasers for nearly every month for years to come. As the certificates mature the proceeds are reinvested in the same class of security. The small investor is educated to the merits of the equipment trust certificate, so that the demand and price now commanded are the largest purchasers. The certificates are always secured by the equipment purchased with the proceeds, which is not owned by the railroad but by the trustee of the mortgage.

$ $ $

The suit against the Steel Corporation is unnecessarily because the competition now under consideration by the Steel Corporation is made to the government by the Pittsburgh-Lake Erie people. The scheme for the control of steel trade, as outlined in the Pittsburgh-Lake Erie plan of competition filed last week, is too radical and absurd to be listened seriously by the Steel Corporation.

$ $ $

Very few investors can be recalled where the holders of equipment trust certificates have received less than par for their securities. The courts have decided that the payment of these certificates is in a class with the payment of wages; they have been paid even where preferences in the hands of receivers have been disregarded in order to pay the maturing equipment trust certificates. Although the Wheeling & Lake Erie is in receivership, its equipment trust certificates are paid off at maturity, while other important facts in connection with the certificates further indicate investments in that, although the securities nominally are those of the railroad, the investment back of the certificates remains the same until the entire issue has been paid off.

$ $ $

When the Interstate Commerce Commission began regulating the railroads most persons in the financial district threw their hands in horror and said that the railroads would be ruined but the railroads are still doing business and on a higher scale than ever before. The securities of the railroads some responsible for the reductions in rates and regulations will emerge none the worse from the ordeal. Many of the industrial plants confiscated they candled and are now operating. Industrial plants could be injured. All the big corporations that have shown a model and the government to see orders it unfair to them how to work before the representative Tobacco Company case, wicked stock jobbers that the original inquisitive when the suit was brought use the opportunity to a proposition because there seemed to be more votes in a law suit.

$ $

It was only a few months ago that official announcement was made by American Smelting & Refining that the Federal Grand Jury investigation of the company and New York had ceased to complain of in its organization. It appears that the Federal officials were content to rest upon the old evidence and did not give the public of wealth to the smelting corporation, as generally believed at the time. Discovery of this fact is no surprise, for it is the belief of stock jockeys that most of the evidence in the hands of the jury would be watched for evidence. It is not the important whether Trust now or in a few years, since the Sherman law is enforced by weeks, since the Supreme Court decision "cannot hundred" others in the campaign that political exigencies make necessary.

$ $

In one respect the steel trade is certainly improving. Railroad buying is increasing. Reports indicate that there is every reason to expect a continuance of the improvement. The railroad traffic is holding up fairly well and orders are being placed much more freely. In addition to orders previously reported, Erie has an application before the Public Service Commission to issue $4,600,000 equipment trusts, and the Missouri Pacific is considering the offering of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 for like security. The latter road, under the new management, has been spending on the property large amounts for larger appropriations from earnings. Its August statement for the 12 months shows an increase of $37,000 in gross, and an increase of $343,000 in expenses.

Baltimore & Ohio is not yet a 5 per cent. stock, even if some of the market letter writers have fallen into the habit of considering it such. In the past fiscal year the company earned the full 5 per cent. on the common and had a margin of $1,436,946 over. Considering the number of new expense items who in the company had to submit to, and the fact that the concessions made to the labor unions put the earnings of 1912 under a heavy tension, this result is better than had been expected. The Baltimore & Ohio is entering south, coupled with its loss in gross earnings, brought down a net receipt of $2,188,800 in net earnings as compared with 1910.

SCOUT HUNTING OUT GOOD ROADS

By J. C. KERRISON.

The good roads scouting trip through Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia, under the direction of the American Automobile Association, was started from Jacksonville yesterday. E. L. Ferguson, who was their scout in the record climbed trip, being the man selected to map out this route. He used for the purpose the six-cylinder touring car which completed the trip from New York to Jacksonville as a press car.

The purpose of this tour is to secure data and information as an aid to the forthcoming tours from different points in the South to the first American road congress to be held at Richmond, Va., November 20 to 24. The trip will extend over a period of five days.

The new sales and display rooms of Lawrence A. Stanley, 157 Massachusetts avenue, distributors for the Mitchell car, were formally opened yesterday evening. The complete line of Mitchell cars, including this year's improvements, are on display, the Mitchell Racy "six" and the Mitchell Geabout—the latter a roadster and touring car combined—a two-passenger car of attractive appearance and handy proportions.

These cars have created a sensation in a very prominent manner throughout the country, and are so well known in this section that they need no further introduction.

The firm of Lawrence A. Stanley, while virtually a new one in Boston people, is by no means a new one in the automobile business in Massachusetts for a good many years it has been a member of the trade and familiar with every detail of the industry.

As a result of the meeting of the White Mountains Board of Trade, held in Concord, N. H., a few days ago, it is probable that the men most interested in the matter will be know about the attractions of that part of the country next year. It is probable that attention to a number of routes entering the mountains will be given by the board, one one usually followed.

The board has been reported that there are several good routes leading into the White Mountains, but the principal one of which the average tourist knows little or nothing, and that it would be possible to publish an itinerary that would keep the visiting automobilist there for perhaps several weeks, were the entire region mapped out. The board's activities will be confined to a number of new maps, which will probably be prepared by the A. A. A. Touring Board.

In view of the decision of the State Supreme Court, upholding the law passed by the last Legislature for the purchase of the Fore River plant, it is difficult to see any flaw in the New Hampshire State anti-trust law which will prevent the purchase of the property by right of eminent domain. The Keith is a favorite visiting place for New England motorists.

GOV. FOSS TO BE WARD 17 GUEST

Governor Foss, with Mrs. Congressman James M. Curley, will lead the grand march at the tenth annual ball given by the Ward 17 Democratic Club, in Interscholastic Hall Thursday evening. The function this year will be in the form of a reception to the governor. The event promises to be the greatest in the club's history, Fitzgerald in the grand march with Governor Foss and Curley with Mrs. Foss. Democratic orators from all parts of the state will be present.

The ball will be made brilliant by the presence in the gallery of the entire 17th company of the State militia, and a number of other military organizations. The armory is also undergoing repairs at the Navy Yard.

MORE SHOES WORN, BUT FEWER SLIPPERS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—More than 247,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes—three pairs apiece for all the men and enough to walk—are made in the United States every year, according to Census Bureau figures, the figures are for 1910. They show an increase of 15 per cent. over 1904.

	No. of Pairs.	Value.
Boots and shoes	247,000,000	$181,000,000
Men's and youths' shoes	78,800,000	78,800,000
Women's shoes	28,500,000	28,500,000
Misses' and children's shoes	28,500,000	28,500,000
Slippers	28,500,000	28,500,000

In addition, 28,500,000 pairs of slippers were made. This is a decrease from 1904, in which year and children's shoes, are giving up slippers.

There were 1,918 footwear factories, with $222,324,000 capital. They had 214,000 employees, with $53,000,000 for wages. The materials and turned out $313,000,000 in finished product.

125 SUPERVISORS TALK OF VOCATIONS

One hundred and twenty-five vocational supervisors met at the high commercial school yesterday afternoon to hear an outline plan for a series of talks to be given by Frank M. Leavitt, director of vocational guidance in the Boston public schools. It will become the duty of these supervisors to talk to the boys and girls of graduating classes in the public schools, and Director Leavitt has outlined a plan to an occupation that suits and in which success is probable. The meeting was successful. Mayor Bloomfield, who has been a friend of this movement from the start, hopes the parents will co-operate in every possible way with the teachers in giving up slippers.

FOSS INDORSED BY NEW HEBREW CLUB

The Hebrew Independent Club, organized at a meeting in the office of Judge Albert Mansfield, will support Governor Foss for re-election. The purpose of this club is to further the interests of the Democratic party in Ward 17. The officers of this club are: John H. Mahoney, president; Arthur J. Heiber, vice president; Louis A. Hirsohon, secretary, and Samuel Rosenberg, treasurer. Honorary President John D. Marks called attention to the fact that active action on the part of the Hebrew voters in last November's election resulted in the election of Hebrew representation in the House of Representatives.

$2,000,000 ONE DAY'S BOSTON TAX RECEIPTS

Clerks in the City Collector's office took a record-breaking payment of this year's taxes yesterday because of the law by which no interest will be charged after Nov. 1. Lieutenant Governor Frothingham was one of the first to call, waiting to deposit his check for $523.55. D. Long also appeared to pay the taxes on his property in Dorchester. He left out his visit short by giving his check to a friend who lives in the neighborhood.

FRENCH BATTLESHIP IN EXPLOSION PERIL

PARIS, Oct. 31.—The French battleship Admiral Charnier has had a narrow escape from a catastrophe, according to a dispatch received here from Toulon. A sailor placed his hand on a shell in one of the magazines and found it so hot that he smelled a fuse. All the projectiles on board were dumped into the sea.

"THREE ROMEOS" BIG MUSICAL HIT; "POMANDER WALK" A MIRTH WINNER

Tuneful Numbers Catch Audience in Merry Offering at Colonial.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

Where in the days who calls a modern musical comedy could not survive a genius, quartered sub, hand-polished floor? Let his worry with the composition of "The Three Romeos" and change his mind, for the Colonial Theatre fairly sizzled with plots, counter plots, sub plots, complementary plots and then more plots last evening and leaving the difficulty of keeping up with the swiftly moving story to Miss Esther Lyon & Deering's latest musical comedy the audience settled itself to enjoy one of the happiest comedies of the year.

"The Three Romeos" wanted some deep in appreciation complications—it was up to Hugh Morton to get them all straightened out in the middle of fourth with the audience leaning forward by the edge of their seats. Measured by the strictest dramatic standards "The Three Romeos" is not a musical play of high nature but Mason & Morton certainly have a knack of wrestled a box-office triumph. Taken as such "The Three Romeos" takes no such slim chance—it will prove popular with musical comedy members all over the country and during the next few weeks will be found in the list best bets for those in search with copies of "I'm Looking for a Girl Like You."

Many Catchy Tunes.

"The Three Romeos" is the most work of H. E. Bunhouse, who wrote the book and lyrics, and Raymond Hubbell, who composed the music. Both have done better work than that displayed last night, but the overcrowding audience was not in the mood for critical taste it was out to enjoy the evening's performance. Mr. Hubbell's opening chorus, with its catchy melody, less complications, hit the audience squarely on the funny bone and for the rest of the evening there was a steady stream of that was poured out so promptly. Largely responsible for the success of "The Three Romeos" is the cast which has been selected for it. Not a single complaint in the better of good natured entertainment can be registered. Gracie Cains lifted her voice and Mildred Cook and Ethel Cadman danced their way into the good graces of the audience. Miss Rose Young and their associates fully meeting the demands of the powerfully dramatic and stirring situations brought out by the skilful work of author and dramatist.

Of the cast as a whole praise of acting is due Charles Steele, temporarily bereft of his voice, was in the enjoyment of the evening rendered to the rugged region of the Rockies. Mr. Steele's work and that of Mr. Craig accepted his opportunity for the best work was in clear by frequent and generous applause of a large audience.

As Rosalie, the heroine of the stirring play, Mary Young was a prominent figure, as was Mr. Hassell as Joe Portugais, a part in which he has been seen to better advantage on the stage in a long time and shortly thereafter in the honors of a very successful production. Others in the support strongly sustained the leading roles in the play.

Grand Opera House.

A whirlwind of catchy songs, novelty specialties, electric effects and a bevy of chorus girls brought to Boston for a week's stay at the Grand Opera House by A. H. Woods, Dudley in his New Smart Set three-act musical comedy, "The Thursday Review," Mr. Dudley is one of the funniest of the fifth Stock company that has been seen at the theatre in a long time and shortly thereafter in the honors of a very successful production. Others in the support strongly sustained the leading roles in the play.

Plymouth.

Like a glass of rare, sparkling, cobwebbed wine to the jaded palate, is the presentation of the thoroughly delightful and sparkling comedy, "Pomander Walk" to the blase theatregoer.

It is a welcome taste in the month's memory as of a happy dream. Along with the quaint, old-fashioned tunes, and swelling airs of the haunting Road of smiling sky, of the curled, powdered and pigtailed beaux and belles, of the quaint thinks he is enveloped in the pages of Thackeray's "Pen and the Inkbottle" and he is duly rewarded away. Sometimes he is in a quaint New England town where nothing ever seems to happen and yet he sits up breathlessly enthralled.

The play is at the Plymouth Theatre for the week beginning Monday. And it was writing a second time. But yet it does not appear to one as having had a second, brilliant playwright has put down and coolly planned and polished off a gem of the first water. The series of photographic and phonographic pictures of a little Englishmen's home in the little homes tenanted by the "nets" in the play—there are fifteen scenes in all in the play—there are fifteen scenes in all in the scenes in the "Pomander Walk." Says the program:

Old Chinese Proverb: Where is it? Understood—Everywhere. Object of Searching for Understanding—Nowhere.

There are only six little houses in a secluded spot, but they are full of the spirit of good fellowship, yet close enough for its echoes to be heard in every one of the houses. The story is simple and sunny-tempered. The play is made for the original company and one could not imagine another company doing it. Not that the company of stars for every one in the cast is a star.

The art of acting was never better exemplified in Boston than in this play produced by an English company, though it is not that art that one feels he must admire and can't for the life of him stop. One realizes when watching the performance that that unexplainable something drawn between exquisite acting and no acting at all.

One could hardly select for special mention any one else without doing injustice to the others.

Keith's.

Everybody was pleased with "Everybody," the new morality sketch featured as the headliner at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, and the audience showed its pleasure last night. But excellent as the big production is, Bixley and Lorraine, a dainty team stylling themselves the original Carson and Willard, ran it a close second for the greater laugh promoters and most popular offering.

"Everybody" is a cleanly, humorous morality sketch, by Edgar Allan Woolf, in which the different characters are typified by the following names: Wife, Home; Husband, Pleasure; Other Woman, Pleasure; Second Friend, Waiter; Newsboy, Fame.

The theme of the little playlet recounts how Everybody took up with Shirk, and through him was introduced to Miss Luck and Miss Chance. By neglecting his wife and Work, his disregard of Advice and final downfall when Sickie Mae Love deserted him at a race track poolroom is set forth in striking colors. "In and out-door," so finally listens to Advice, receives his former entity to Honesty and Work, who Fortune and is happy ever after.

Brooks and Harris in a "Mild Flirtation" with Three brothers in an exhibition turn, O'Brien, Harvey and company in "Mixed," Medley and Ed Morton in a duet songs, the Rogers in a skeletal novelty, the Edward Jolly Winfred Wilt company in a musical melange, and Martinette and Sylvester as the Man with the Cane. All received a generous greeting from the large audience.

New National.

The Joys are many and the sorrows few at the New National Theatre, where the latest picture of an excellent bill. The prime comedy is the songs and jokes in the missionary, Tom Edwards and Grace Lindquist in the sketch, "Two Girls Islands, marks a decided hit in their line of work now. Edwards as the missionary and Miss Lindquist as the native girl, Miss Lindquist as the native girl, Miss Lindquist as the native girl,

Mr. Frothingham's Solicitude for Workingmen and Women a Monstrous Absurdity.

If ever the people of this Commonwealth saw an occasion of serious public concern, such as this election, turned into a ghastly comedy, it is the spectacle of Henry Cabot Lodge and Louis A. Frothingham charging against windmills up and down this State in defence of the cause of the workingmen.

Never since the wolf put on the nightcap of Little Red Riding Hood's grandmother, and invited the little girl to kiss him, has story or verse exhibited such remarkable scenes as those in which Mr. Lodge and Mr. Frothingham assume the role of friends to the workingmen of Massachusetts.

One of the great weekly publications of the nation this week contains a cartoon which represents Senator Lodge as a large figure with drawn sword charging at the head of a host of little figures representing soldiers with fixed bayonets. A banner appears in their midst, bearing the inscription: "Voters of Massachusetts." The cartoon is entitled: "Senator Lodge's Appeal to Massachusetts," and Senator Lodge's battle-cry is given as follows:

"Strike—for your coupons and your bonds,
Strike—for your stocks and dividends,
Your mills and Schedule K."

All writers of national reputation who have investigated and written upon public affairs from a non-partisan standpoint have agreed that Senator Lodge is to-day the arch-type of all that is undesirable and dangerous in our political and economic and industrial system.

Is it, then, at all remarkable that there should be the feeling which the stand-pat Republicans say exists against Massachusetts on the part of the rest of the country, when her vote is cast by Senators Lodge and Crane in the United States Senate against the national welfare upon nearly every rollcall?

During the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, Mr. Lodge voted with Aldrich 102 times and voted against Aldrich once. One of the publications which is read in every village and hamlet of the country says this:

"Lodge prefers to keep his seat secure by maintaining, through patronage and through close affiliation with the corporations that benefit by the tariff, one of the most odious politicial machines in the United States. His political record on the floor of the Senate is constantly marked by deviousness.

"When the Payne-Aldrich tariff was in effect and there was considerable dissatisfaction with it, Senator Elkins, who was himself a high protectionist, but a straightforward man, sought to have a committee investigate the relation of the tariff to the cost of living.

"Later he charged, on the floor of the Senate, that Lodge conspired with Aldrich to choke off the investigation."

Several hundred thousand people throughout the country will read this opinion of Lodge contained in this publication alone, and it is typical of the opinion universally held concerning Senator Lodge in the country at large.

The AMERICAN does not say this about Mr. Lodge in order that the people of Massachusetts may have a clearer view of the character of his public service, but that they may understand why there is feeling against Massachusetts in the nation.

Our fellow countrymen outside of this Commonwealth do not know that Senator Lodge is disapproved by a majority of our people.

They do not know that he was re-elected notwithstanding the fact that a majority of the votes which elected the last Legislature were cast for candidates pledged against his re-election.

They do not know that he secured his re-election through the gerrymandering of Representative and Senatorial districts, by which the will of the majority was not represented by a majority in the Legislature.

Not knowing these facts, the country believes that public opinion in Massachusetts supports men like Senator Lodge and that Massachusetts workingmen believe the ridiculous tales which he relates to them concerning their interests.

The only difference between the spectacle of Senator Lodge playing Ruth and Naomi with labor, and the spectacle of Mr. Frothingham playing the same humorous part, is that Senator Lodge knows better and Mr. Frothingham may believe he is playing a real part, because Senator Lodge told him to do it.

But Mr. Frothingham, deliberately false or innocently ignorant, is none the less humorous in the role of the workingman's friend.

It is a fortunate thing that the one public record of Mr. Frothingham has, where he could show the extent of his mind on the questions which affect the workingmen was during his service in the Legislature, where the rollcall has enabled his views on these questions.

The rollcall is an inexorable institution in these days when tariff grafting and corporation exploiting tend to lower the standard of political morals and tempt men to be false with their fellow citizens. The rollcall is like a guilty conscience that pursues us always.

"We can take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea," but the rollcall is there when we are. It is like the ghost of Banquo, it will not down. It is like the mills of God, and, "The mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small. Patiently he stands waiting, yet exactly he records all."

That rollcall is Mr. Frothingham's Nemesis, for it records the fact that he voted against giving workingmen the right of a trial by jury in certain cases where they had been wrongfully denied by the courts this great privilege of American citizenship. This year, under the leadership of Governor Foss, that law was passed and now no judge may take away a workingman's liberty, in these cases, without a trial by a jury of his peers.

He voted against the recommendation of a Republican legislative committee that a law be passed forbidding manufacturers to compel women in their employment to work overtime in order to make up for time lost by the stoppage of machinery. That bill has become a law in spite of Mr. Frothingham.

He voted against making eight hours a working day. That bill has since become a law in spite of Mr. Frothingham.

He voted against allowing the Boston policemen one day in twenty-seven, although the Legislature, Republicans and Democrats, passed the bill by a vote of 113 to 94.

He voted against a bill requiring the railroads to provide one brakeman for every ten cars in freight trains instead of one brakeman on the last car only. The House passed that bill.

He voted against a bill to provide emergency funds for the employment of labor during periods of panic.

This is only a partial statement of his record which affected workingmen. They are a part of the general public, and what would affect the interests of the general public adversely will affect them adversely.

Consequently, Mr. Frothingham's extraordinary corporation record, coupled with his particular record as the alleged solicitude for [illegible] monstrous absurdity of a generation.

[illegible] are amused.

Why I Shall Vote for Foss

By CHARLES W. WOOD.

GENERAL CHARLES W. WOOD of Worcester is the leading representative of the agricultural interests of Massachusetts and one of the most influential men in the agrarian movement of the nation. He is a veteran of the Civil War, fought in twenty-seven battles and was wounded at Cold Harbor.

He is the department and national commander of the Union Veterans' Union. He was for five years president of the New England Holstein-Friesian Club. For three years he has been president of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America. For the last five years he has been chairman of the Worcester County Milk Producers' Association. He is president of the National Dairy Congress with headquarters in Chicago. He is a life long Republican and one of Worcester's largest tax payers. He has a farm in Shrewsbury of one hundred acres, with sixty head of cattle.

To the Farmers of Massachusetts:

Upon the eve of my departure for Chicago to preside over the National Dairy Congress, I am impelled to make public my political position relative to the coming State election. Many persons from different parts of the State have recently communicated with me to learn my attitude, and for this reason I believe it my duty to openly declare myself. I am a Republican, and always have been, but never have and never will place party before principle.

I fully intend to vote for Eugene N. Foss for Governor.

I shall vote for Augustus L. Thorndike for State Treasurer. Each is a representative of the Democratic party.

I will give some of my reasons. I am intensely interested in the agricultural interests of this good Commonwealth, and am poised to know these interests have been seriously impaired. For a number of years the various products of the State have continually diminished. Some interested ones have sought to mislead the public by reporting the products of the State as more each year, but they have used the scale of dollars and cents which show an increase; but with the allowance for the advance in prices it is positively manifest that the volume of our products has seriously diminished, our farmers are growing poorer each day, and our abandoned farms are being multiplied.

For the past five years, as representative of these interests, I, in common with many others, have waited upon a Republican Legislature and a Republican Governor, pointing out in incontrovertible terms the causes of this lamentable decline, and the injustice of existing laws. The danger of proposed enactments has been continually proclaimed by men of irreproachable character, of wide observation and life-long experience, and yet the General Court has contributed little relief, and even sought to intensify existing conditions. It, therefore, no relief can be secured through the Republican party, self-preservation demands of the farmers that they turn to that source which promises them most.

The gentleman who is a candidate of the Republican party for Governor has been intimately associated with the General Court for many years, and I have never yet known him to vote or raise his voice in protest of measures inimical to the farmers' interests.

I recently addressed a public letter to him, asking him what he would do if the Ellis Bill was re-enacted, and presented for his signature as Governor. His reply was evasive and lame, and promised no help from him. For this reason alone I cannot conscientiously support him, and I will not vote for him while a vote for another makes my action all the more effective.

Why do I vote for the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer? Because I would cut my right hand off before I would vote for Elmer E. Stevens. For years I saw this gentleman in the Halls of the Legislature, and so far as his ability made it possible I think he injured the agricultural interests of this State more than is generally understood. His position, so far as I observed it, was always against the interests of the dairymen, and when once in committee room I was charged by me with ignorance of the milk question, and why? Never having investigated the matter, and challenged to give a single source of information, he finally replied, "That he had the night before talked with the proprietor of a milk shop." He is presumably an estimable gentleman, personally and privately, but politically I had no word that express my estimate of him.

His course has obtained the endorsement of his party, and he now occupies the head of a financial institution, the largest and most important in New England States, without, so far as I know, any fitness for it except what he acquired while framing wholesome laws and advocating pernicious provisions affecting the dairy interests of this State. I am sorry, and will not become a party to any kind of politics.

I shall vote for Governor Eugene N. Foss, because in the main I approve of his administration, which merits endorsement.

His appointments to the Supreme and Superior Court bench have greatly strengthened the Judiciary.

I believe his appointment to the Railroad Commission highly desirable. His refusal to appoint Mr. White in deference to certain [illegible] shows both the sagacity and courage of a Governor who, if for no other reason, should receive the support of every farmer of this State. For several years I have made [illegible] peared before this commission in behalf of the dairy interests of this State, and if Mr. White possessed the knowledge upon our interest in the transportation of milk, I never discovered it. We can all see what kind of a political bunco game a Republican Council will attempt.

Governor Foss re-appointed Mr. Fred F. Walker, a practical farmer, as Chief of the Cattle Bureau, in defiance of concerted opposition, doing this I believe in deference to the interests of the Commonwealth.

Governor Foss refused to approve and prevented from becoming a law the bill passed by such Boards of Health, giving local boards of health authority to make rules governing the [illegible] and sale of milk, [illegible] revolution and [illegible] that 500 different sets of rules in this State would interfere with [illegible] It is hard to believe that [illegible] school children [illegible] folly as that.

Again the Governor [illegible] the farmer's right to [illegible] in response to his petition, [illegible] filed by the executive [illegible] Grangers of the State, [illegible] pected farmers, [illegible] that public abomination which Ellis [illegible] hold through the General Court at great expense and [illegible] the "Ellis Milk Bill."

Governor Foss has endeavored himself to every farmer in the Commonwealth by his action in [illegible] the Attorney-General to [illegible] the interests in the State should suffer [illegible] now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, [illegible] combination between the Boston milk contractors and the railroads.

Governor Foss has shown great deference to the [illegible] interests than any executive I [illegible] known in the past fifteen years, and for these reasons I shall vote for his continuance in office. [illegible] who fails to vote for the re-election of Eugene N. Foss [illegible] election, must look [illegible] of conditions and expect the [illegible]

I certainly have [illegible] opportunity, farmers will be [illegible] in such positive and express a [illegible] suit with decency and manner, [illegible] who strikes at, or [illegible] strate [illegible] to, the agricultural interests of this State may not look for [illegible] support from the Massachusetts farmers.

It is important therefore that the Massachusetts farmers should vote for Governor Eugene N. Foss at the November election, or he has helped us more than any other. Such a course will not only [illegible] credit where credit is due, but it will [illegible] to administer to the respective leaders of the Republican party a richly deserved rebuke.

I hope fervently expect the re-election of Governor Eugene N. Foss, and the defeat of Louis A. Frothingham for Governor, and Elmer E. Stevens for State Treasurer.

(Signed) CHARLES W. WOOD.

The Social Bug.

WHEN, "Everybody" comes to town,
As leaves are turning red and brown,
The Social Bug is right at hand,
Spurging around to beat the band.
She snubs the Social Bugs below her,
And hopes the ones above will know her.
She knows exactly who is who,
Who will and who won't ever do;
With armored nerve and patience grim
She seeks a place that's in the swim.

The social ladder bravely climbs.
